"(b) Allocation of Appropriations.—(1) If the sums appropriated for any fiscal year to make payments to States under this part are not sufficient to pay in full the sum of the amounts which State educational agencies are entitled to receive under this part for such year, the allocations to State educational agencies shall be ratably reduced to the extent necessary to bring the aggregate of such allocations within the limits of the amounts so appropriated.

"(2) In the event that funds become available for making payments under this part for any period after allocations have been made under paragraph (1) of this subsection for such period, the amounts reduced under such paragraph shall be increased on the same basis as they were reduced.

"SEC. 4404. STATE ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.

"The Secretary is authorized to pay to each State educational agency amounts equal to the amounts expended by it for the proper and efficient administration of its functions under this part, except that the total of such payments for any period shall not exceed 1.5 per centum of the amounts which that State educational agency is entitled to receive for that period under this part.

"SEC. 4405. WITHHOLDING.

"Whenever the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to any State educational agency, finds that there is a failure to meet the requirements of any provision of this part, the Secretary shall notify that agency that further payments will not be made to the agency under this part, or in the discretion of the Secretary, that the State educational agency shall not make further payments under this part to specified local educational agencies whose actions cause or are involved in such failure until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until the Secretary is so satisfied, no further payments shall be made to the State educational agency under this part, or payments by the State educational agency under this part shall be limited to local educational agencies whose actions did not cause or were not involved in the failure, as the case may be.

"SEC. 4406. STATE ENTITLEMENTS.

"(a) Payments.—The Secretary shall, in accordance with the provisions of this section, make payments to State educational agencies for each of the fiscal years 1985 through 1993 for the purpose set forth in section 4407.

"(b) Entitlements.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (3) and in subsections (c) and (d) of this section, the amount of the grant to which a State educational agency is entitled under this part shall be equal to the product of (A) the number of immigrant children enrolled during such fiscal year in elementary and secondary public schools under the jurisdiction of each local educational agency described under paragraph (2) within that State, and in any elementary or secondary nonpublic school within the district served by each such local educational agency, multiplied by (B) $500.

"(2) The local educational agencies referred to in paragraph (1) are those local educational agencies in which the sum of the number of immigrant children who are enrolled in elementary or secondary public schools under the jurisdiction of such agencies, and in elementary or secondary nonpublic schools within the districts served by such agencies, during the fiscal year for which the payments are to be made under this part, is equal to—

"(A) at least 500; or

"(B) at least 3 percent of the total number of students enrolled in such public or nonpublic schools during such fiscal year; whichever number is less.

"(3)(A) The amount of the grant of any State educational agency for any fiscal year as determined under paragraph (1) shall be reduced by the amounts made available for such fiscal year under any other Federal law for expenditure within the State for the same purpose as those for which funds are available under this part, but such reduction shall be made only to the extent that (i) such amounts are made available for such purpose specifically because of the refugee, parollee, asylee, or other immigrant status of the individuals served by such funds, and (ii) such amounts are made available to provide assistance to individuals eligible for services under this part.

"(B) No reduction of a grant under this part shall be made under subparagraph (A) for any fiscal year if a reduction is made, pursuant to a comparable provision in any such other Federal law, in the amount made available for expenditure in the State for such fiscal year under such other Federal law, based on the amount assumed to be available under this part.

"(c) Determinations of Number of Children.—(1) Determinations by the Secretary under this section for any period with respect to the number of immigrant children shall be made on the basis of data or estimates provided to the Secretary by each State educational agency in accordance with criteria established by the Secretary, unless the Secretary determines, after notice and opportunity for a hearing to the affected State educational agency, that such data or estimates are clearly erroneous.

"(2) No such determination with respect to the number of immigrant children shall operate because of an underestimate or overestimate to deprive any State educational agency of its entitlement to any payment (or the amount thereof) under this section to which such agency would be entitled had such determination been made on the basis of accurate data.

"(d) Reallocation.—Whenever the Secretary determines that any amount of a payment made to a State under this part for a fiscal year will not be used by such State for carrying out the purpose for which the payment was made, the Secretary shall make such amount available for carrying out such purpose to 1 or more other States to the extent the Secretary determines that such other States will be able to use such additional amount for carrying out such purpose. Any amount made available to a State from an appropriation for a fiscal year in accordance with the preceding sentence shall, for purposes of this part, be regarded as part of such State's payment (as determined under subsection (b)) for such year, but shall remain available until the end of the succeeding fiscal year.

"SEC. 4407. USES OF FUNDS.

"(a) Supplementary Educational Services and Costs.—Payments made under this part to any State may be used in accordance with applications approved under section 4408 for supplementary educational services and costs, as described under subsection (b) of this section, for immigrant children enrolled in the elementary and secondary public schools under the jurisdiction of the local educational agencies of the State described in section 4406(b)(2) and in elementary and secondary nonpublic schools of that State within the districts served by such agencies.

"(b) Kinds of Services and Costs.—Financial assistance provided under this part shall be available to meet the costs of providing immigrant children supplementary educational services, including but not limited to—

"(B) other bilingual educational services; and

"(C) special materials and supplies;

"(2) additional basic instructional services which are directly attributable to the presence in the school district of immigrant children, including the costs of providing additional classroom supplies, overhead costs, costs of construction, acquisition or rental of space, costs of transportation, or such other costs as are directly attributable to such additional basic instructional services; and

"SEC. 4408. APPLICATIONS.

Each such application shall—

"(1) provide that the educational programs, services, and activities for which payments under this part are made will be administered by or under the supervision of the agency;

"(2) provide assurances that payments under this part will be used for purposes set forth in section 4407;

"(3) provide assurances that such payments will be distributed among local educational agencies within that State on the basis of the number of children counted with respect to such local educational agency under section 4406(b)(1), adjusted to reflect any reductions imposed pursuant to section 4406(b)(3) which are attributable to such local educational agency;

"(4) provide assurances that the State educational agency will not finally disapprove in whole or in part any application for funds received under this part without first affording the local educational agency submitting an application for such funds reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing;

"(B) that the control of funds provided under this part and title to any materials, equipment, and property repaired, remodeled, or constructed with those funds shall be in a public agency for the uses and purposes provided in this part, and a public agency shall administer such funds and property; and

"(C) that the provision of services pursuant to this paragraph shall be provided by employees of a public agency or through contract by such public agency with a person, association, agency, or corporation who or which, in the provision of such services, is independent of such elementary or secondary nonpublic school and of any religious organization; and such employment or contract shall be under the control and supervision of such public agency, and the funds provided under this paragraph shall not be commingled with State or local funds.

"(b) Approval of Application.—The Secretary shall approve an application which meets the requirements of subsection (a). "(b) Services to Children Enrolled in Nonpublic Schools.—If by reason of any provision of law a local educational agency is prohibited from providing educational services for children enrolled in elementary and secondary nonpublic schools, as required by section 4408(a)(6), or if the Secretary determines that a local educational agency has substantially failed or is unwilling to provide for the participation on an equitable basis of children enrolled in such schools, the Secretary may waive such requirement and shall arrange for the provision of services to such children through arrangements which shall be subject to the requirements of this part. Such waivers shall be subject to consultation, withholding, notice, and judicial review requirements in accordance with the provisions of chapter 1 of title I.

"TITLE VII—BILINGUAL EDUCATION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 7001. SHORT TITLE.

"This title may be cited as the 'Bilingual Education Act'.

"SEC. 7002. POLICY; APPROPRIATIONS.

"(a) Policy.—Recognizing—

"(1) that there are large and growing numbers of children of limited English proficiency;

"(2) that many of such children have a cultural heritage which differs from that of English proficient persons;

"(3) that the Federal Government has a special and continuing obligation to assist in providing equal educational opportunity to limited English proficient children;

"(4) that, regardless of the method of instruction, programs which serve limited English proficient students have the equally important goals of developing academic achievement and English proficiency;

"(5) that the Federal Government has a special and continuing obligation to assist language minority students to acquire the English language proficiency that will enable them to become full and productive members of society;

"(6) that the instructional use and development of a child's non-English native language promotes student self-esteem, subject matter achievement, and English-language acquisition;

"(7) that a primary means by which a child learns is through the use of such child's native language and cultural heritage;

"(8) that, therefore, large numbers of children of limited English proficiency have educational needs which can be met by the use of bilingual educational methods and techniques;

"(9) that in some school districts establishment of bilingual education programs may be administratively impractical due to the presence of small numbers of students of a particular native language or because personnel who are qualified to provide bilingual instructional services are unavailable;

"(10) that States and local school districts should be encouraged to determine appropriate curricula for limited English proficient students within their jurisdictions and to develop and implement appropriate instructional programs;

"(11) that children of limited English proficiency have a high dropout rate and low median years of education;

"(12) that the segregation of many groups of limited English proficient students remains a serious problem;

"(13) that reliance on student evaluation procedures which are inappropriate for limited English proficient students have resulted in the disproportionate representation of limited English proficient students in special education, gifted and talented, and other special programs;

"(14) that there is a serious shortage of teachers and educational personnel who are professionally trained and qualified to serve children of limited English proficiency;

"(15) that many schools fail to meet the full instructional needs of limited English proficient students who also may be handicapped or gifted and talented;

"(16) that both limited English proficient children and children whose primary language is English can benefit from bilingual education programs, and that such programs help develop our national linguistic resources and promote our international competitiveness;

"(17) that research, evaluation, and data collection capabilities in the field of bilingual education need to be strengthened so as to better identify and promote those programs and instructional practices which result in effective education;

"(18) that parent and community participation in bilingual education programs contributes to program effectiveness; and

"(19) that because of limited English proficiency, many adults are not able to participate fully in national life, and that limited English proficient parents are often not able to participate effectively in their children's education, the Congress declares it to be the policy of the United States, in order to establish equal educational opportunity for all children and to promote educational excellence (A) to encourage the establishment and operation, where appropriate, of educational programs using bilingual educational practices, techniques, and methods, (B) to encourage the establishment of special alternative instructional programs for students of limited English proficiency in school districts where the establishment of bilingual education programs is not practicable or for other appropriate reasons, and (C) for those purposes, to provide financial assistance to local educational agencies, and, for certain related purposes, to State educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and community organizations. The programs assisted under this title include programs in elementary and secondary schools as well as related preschool and adult programs which are designed to meet the educational needs of individuals of limited English proficiency, with particular attention to children having the greatest need for such programs. Such programs shall be designed to enable students to achieve full competence in English and to meet school grade-promotion and graduation requirements. Such programs may additionally provide for the development of student competence in a second language.

"(b) Authorization.—(1) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated, subject to paragraph (6), $200,000,000 for the fiscal year 1989 and such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal year 1990 and for each succeeding fiscal year ending prior to October 1, 1993.

"(2) There are further authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of section 7032, subject to paragraph (6), such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal year 1989 and each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years.

"(3) From the sums appropriated under paragraph (1) for part A for any fiscal year, the Secretary may reserve not to exceed 25 percent for special alternative instructional programs and related activities authorized under section 7021(a)(3) and may include programs under paragraphs (2), (4), (5), and (6) of section 7021(a).

"(4) From the sums appropriated under paragraph (1) for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve at least 60 percent for the programs carried out under part A of this title; and of this amount, at least 75 percent shall be reserved for the programs of transitional bilingual education carried out under section 7021(a)(1), and may include programs under paragraphs (2), (4), (5), and (6) of section 7021(a).

"(5) From the sums appropriated under paragraph (1) for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve at least 25 percent for training activities carried out under part C.

"(6) Notwithstanding paragraphs (1) and (2), no amount in excess of $200,000,000 may be appropriated for the fiscal year 1989 to carry out the provisions of this title (including section 7032).

"(7) The reservation required by paragraph (3) shall not result in changing the terms, conditions, or negotiated levels of any grant awarded in fiscal year 1987 to which section 7021(d)(1)(A), 7021(d)(1)(C), or 7021(d)(2) applies.

"SEC. 7003. DEFINITIONS; REGULATIONS.

"(C) individuals who are American Indian and Alaska Natives and who come from environments where a language other than English has had a significant impact on their level of English language proficiency; and who, by reason thereof, have sufficient difficulty speaking, reading, writing, or understanding the English language to deny such individuals the opportunity to learn successfully in classrooms where the language of instruction is English or to participate fully in our society.

"(2) The term 'native language', when used with reference to an individual of limited English proficiency, means the language normally used by such individuals, or in the case of a child, the language normally used by the parents of the child.

"(3) The term 'low-income' when used with respect to a family means an annual income for such a family which does not exceed the poverty level determined pursuant to section 1005(c)(2) of this Act.

"(4)(A) The term 'program of transitional bilingual education' means a program of instruction, designed for children of limited English proficiency in elementary or secondary schools, which provides, with respect to the years of study to which such program is applicable, structured English language instruction, and, to the extent necessary to allow a child to achieve competence in the English language, instruction in the child's native language. Such instruction shall incorporate the cultural heritage of such children and of other children in American society. Such instruction shall, to the extent necessary, be in all courses or subjects of study which will allow a child to meet grade-promotion and graduation standards.

"(B) In order to prevent the segregation of children on the basis of national origin in programs of transitional bilingual education, and in order to broaden the understanding of children about languages and cultural heritages other than their own, a program of transitional bilingual education may include the participation of children whose language is English, but in no event shall the percentage of such children exceed 40 percent. The program may provide for centralization of teacher training and curriculum development, but it shall serve such children in the schools which they normally attend.

"(C) In such courses or subjects of study as art, music, and physical education, a program of transitional bilingual education shall make provision for the participation of children of limited English proficiency in regular classes.

"(D) Children enrolled in a program of transitional bilingual education shall, if graded classes are used, be placed, to the extent practicable, in classes with children of approximately the same age and level of educational attainment. Such programs shall be designed to help children achieve competence in English and a second language, while mastering subject matter skills. Such instruction shall, to the extent necessary, be in all courses or subjects of study which will allow a child to meet grade-promotion and graduation standards.

"(B) Where possible, classes in programs of developmental bilingual education shall be comprised of approximately equal numbers of students whose native language is English and limited English proficient students whose native language is the second language of instruction and study in the program.

"(6) The term 'special alternative instructional programs' means programs of instruction designed for children of limited English proficiency in elementary and secondary schools. Such programs are not transitional or developmental bilingual education programs, but have specially designed curricula and are appropriate for the particular linguistic and instructional needs of the children enrolled. Such programs shall provide, with respect to the years of study to which such program is applicable, structured English language instruction and special instructional services which will allow a child to achieve competence in the English language and to meet grade-promotion and graduation standards.

"(7) The term 'family English literacy program' means a program of instruction designed to help limited English proficient adults and out-of-school youth achieve competence in the English language. Such programs of instruction may be conducted exclusively in English or in English and the student's native language. Where appropriate, such programs may include instruction on how parents and family members can facilitate the educational achievement of limited English proficient children. To the extent feasible, preference for participation in such programs shall be accorded to the parents and immediate family members of children enrolled in programs assisted under this title. Such programs of instruction may include instruction designed to enable aliens who are otherwise eligible for temporary resident status under section 245A of the Immigration and Nationality Act to achieve a minimal understanding of ordinary English and a knowledge and understanding of history and government of the United States as required by section 312 of such Act.

"(8) The term 'programs of academic excellence' means programs of transitional bilingual education, developmental bilingual education, or special alternative instruction (A) which have an established record of providing effective, academically excellent instruction; and (B) which—

"(9) The term 'Office' means the Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Languages Affairs.

"(10) The term 'Director' means the Director of the Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Languages Affairs.

"(11) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Education.

"(12) The term 'other programs for persons of limited English proficiency' when used in this title means any programs within the Department of Education directly involving bilingual education activities serving persons of limited English proficiency, such as the programs carried out in coordination with the provisions of this title pursuant to part E of title IV of the Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act, and section 306(b)(11) of the Adult Education Act, and programs and projects serving individuals of limited English proficiency pursuant to section 6(b)(4) of the Library Services and Construction Act.

"(b) REGULATION REQUIREMENT.—(1) In prescribing regulations under this title, the Secretary shall consult with State and local educational agencies, organizations representing persons of limited English proficiency, and organizations representing teachers and other personnel involved in bilingual education.

(b) Priority Rule.—The Secretary shall give priority to proposed projects that—

(1) will benefit students or schools with below average academic performance;

(2) will lead to increased access of all students to a high quality education; and

(3) develop or implement systems for providing incentives to schools, administrators, teachers, students, or others to make measurable progress toward specific goals of improved educational performance.

(c) Administrative Rule.—The Secretary shall carry out the provisions of this part through the Board established under section 3231.

SEC. 3212. APPLICATIONS.

Subpart 2—Family-School Partnership

SEC. 3221. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) Findings.—The Congress finds that—

(1) it has been clearly demonstrated that parent involvement is directly related to better student achievement, attitudes, and performance in school;

(2) demographics of the American family are changing to the degree that significant numbers of children attending school come from families with single parents, families in which both parents are employed outside the home, or where the primary caregiver is not the biological parent;

(3) the demographics mean that current approaches to developing and maintaining partnerships with educators in compensatory education programs require review and modification to make them more responsive to the needs of both families and schools; and

(4) effective approaches to more fully involving families as partners in their children's education should be encouraged as a matter of Federal policy.

(b) Purpose.—The purpose of this subpart is to encourage eligible local educational agencies to increase the involvement of families in the improvement of the educational achievement of their children in the preschool, elementary, and secondary schools within such agency.

SEC. 3222. ELIGIBLE AGENCY.

In order to be eligible to receive a grant under this subpart, a local educational agency must be eligible to receive a grant under section 1005 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

SEC. 3223. PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

(a) General Authority.—The Secretary, through the Fund, is authorized to make demonstration grants to eligible local educational agencies for the development of innovative, promising family-school educational partnership activities designed to—

(1) support the efforts of families, including training, to the maximum extent practicable, to work with children in the home to attain both the instructional objectives of the schools within eligible local educational agencies and instill positive attitudes about the importance of education;

(2) train teachers and other staff personnel involved in the program supported under chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to work effectively as educational partners with the families of participating students;

(3) train families, teachers and other staff personnel in the schools within such agency to build an educational partnership between home and school; and

(4) evaluate how well family involvement activities of the schools within such agency are working, what barriers exist to greater participation, and what steps need to be taken to expand participation in such family involvement activities.

(b) Uses of Funds.—The activities and procedures for which grants may be made under this subpart may include—

(1) training programs for the family on the family's educational responsibilities and reasonable and necessary expenditures associated with the attendance of parents or guardians at training sessions;

(2) planning and development of new school procedures and practices to meet the changing demographic characteristics of the families of school-age children;

(3) planning and development of modifications of school procedures and practices necessary for the involvement of parents of special groups, including minorities, disadvantaged, gifted and talented, and students with handicaps;

(4) hiring, training, and use of educational personnel in eligible local educational agencies to coordinate family involvement activities and to foster communications among families, educators, and students;

(5) development and purchase by a local educational agency of educational materials where such materials are commercially unavailable to reinforce school learning at home and assistance in implementing other home-based education activities that reinforce and extend classroom instruction and student motivation; and

(6) securing technical assistance, including training, to design and carry out family involvement programs.

(c) Private School Students.—An application may, consistent with the number of children enrolled in private elementary and secondary schools located in the school district of an eligible educational agency, provide for the participation of such children, their families and teachers.

To enhance its utility, such information shall be both representative and comparable and shall be maintained in a manner that ensures the privacy of individual students and their families. It is not the purpose of this Act to authorize the collection or reporting of information on student attitudes or beliefs or on other matters that are not germane to the acquisition and analysis of information about academic achievement.

SEC. 3403. NATIONAL ASSESSMENT OF EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—Section 406 of the General Education Provisions Act (hereafter in this part referred to as "the Act" and as amended by section 3001 of this title) is amended by redesignating subsection (i) as subsection (j) and by inserting after subsection (h) the following:

"(i)(1) With the advice of the National Assessment Governing Board established by paragraph (5)(a)(i), the Commissioner shall carry out, by grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements with qualified organizations, or consortia thereof, a National Assessment of Educational Progress. The National Assessment of Educational Progress shall be placed in the National Center for Education Statistics and shall report directly to the Commissioner for Educational Statistics. The purpose of the National Assessment is the assessment of the performance of children and adults in the basic skills of reading, mathematics, science, writing, history/geography, and other areas selected by the Board.

"(v) The Commissioner shall provide for an independent evaluation conducted by a nationally recognized organization (such as the National Academy of Sciences or the National Academy of Education) of the pilot programs to assess the feasibility and validity of assessments and the fairness and accuracy of the data they produce. The report shall also describe the technical problems encountered and a description about what was learned about how to best report data from the National Assessment of Educational Progress. The results of this report will be provided to the Congress and to States which participated in assessments pursuant to paragraph (C) (i) and (ii) within 18 months of the time such assessments were conducted.

PART D—GENERAL EDUCATION PROVISIONS ACT

SEC. 3501. ENFORCEMENT UNDER THE GENERAL EDUCATION PROVISIONS ACT.

(a) AMENDMENT TO PART E OF GEPA.—Part E of the General Education Provisions Act is amended to read as follows:

"PART E—ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 451. OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGES.

"(a) The Secretary shall establish in the Department of Education an Office of Administrative Law Judges (hereinafter in this part referred to as the 'Office') which shall conduct—

"(1) recovery of funds hearings pursuant to section 452 of this Act,

"(2) withholding hearings pursuant to section 455 of this Act,

"(3) cease and desist hearings pursuant to section 456 of this Act, and

"(4) other proceedings designated by the Secretary.

"(b) The administrative law judges (hereinafter 'judges') of the Office shall be appointed by the Secretary in accordance with section 3105 of title 5, United States Code.

"(c) The judges shall be officers or employees of the Department. The judges shall meet the requirements imposed for administrative law judges pursuant to section 3105 of title 5, United States Code. In choosing among equally qualified candidates for such positions the Secretary shall give favorable consideration to the candidates' experience in State or local educational agencies and their knowledge of the workings of Federal education programs in such agencies. The Secretary shall designate one of the judges of the Office to be the chief judge.

"(d) For the purposes of conducting hearings described in subsection (a), the chief judge shall assign a judge to each case or class of cases. A judge shall be disqualified in any case in which the judge has a substantial interest, has been of counsel, is or has been a material witness, or is so related to or connected with any party or the party's attorney as to make it improper for the judge to be assigned to the case.

"(e) The judge shall review and may require that evidence be taken on the sufficiency of the preliminary departmental determination as set forth in section 452.

"(f)(1) The proceedings of the Office shall be conducted according to such rules as the Secretary shall prescribe by regulation in conformance with the rules relating to hearings in title 5, United States Code, sections 554, 556, and 557.

"(2) The provisions of title 5, United States Code, section 504, relating to costs and fees of parties, shall apply to the proceedings before the Department.

"(g)(1) In order to secure a fair, expeditious, and economical resolution of cases and where the judge determines that the discovered information is likely to elicit relevant information with respect to an issue in the case, is not sought primarily for the purposes of delay or harassment, and would serve the ends of justice, the judge may order a party to—

"(A) produce relevant documents;

"(B) answer written interrogatories that inquire into relevant matters; and

"(C) have depositions taken.

The judge shall set a time limit of 90 days on the discovery period. The judge may extend this period for good cause shown. At the request of any party, the judge may establish a specific schedule for the conduct of discovery.

"(2) In order to carry out the provisions of subsections (f)(1) and (g)(1), the judge is authorized to issue subpoenas and apply to the appropriate court of the United States for enforcement of a subpoena. The court may enforce the subpoena as if it pertained to a proceeding before that court.

"(h) The Secretary shall establish a process for the voluntary mediation of disputes pending before the Office. The mediator shall be agreed to by all parties involved in mediation and shall be independent of the parties to the dispute. In the mediation of disputes the Secretary shall consider mitigating circumstances and proportion of harm pursuant to section 453. In accordance with rule 408 of the Federal Rules of Evidence, evidence of conduct or statements made in compromise negotiations shall not be admissible in proceedings before the Office. Mediation shall be limited to 120 days, except that the mediator may grant extensions of such period.

"(i) The Secretary shall employ, assign, or transfer sufficient professional personnel, including judges of the Office, to ensure that all matters brought before the Office may be dealt with in a timely manner.

"SEC. 452. RECOVERY OF FUNDS.

"(a)(1) Whenever the Secretary determines that a recipient of a grant or cooperative agreement under an applicable program must return funds because the recipient has made an expenditure of funds that is not allowable under that grant or cooperative agreement, or has otherwise failed to discharge its obligation to account properly for funds under the grant or cooperative agreement, the Secretary shall give the recipient written notice of a preliminary departmental decision and notify the recipient of its right to have that decision reviewed by the Office and of its right to request mediation.

"(2) In a preliminary departmental decision, the Secretary shall have the burden of stating a prima facie case for the recovery of funds. The facts to serve as the basis of the preliminary departmental decision may come from an audit report, an investigative report, a monitoring report, or other evidence. The amount of funds to be recovered shall be determined on the basis of section 453.

"(3) For the purpose of paragraph (2), failure by a recipient to maintain records required by law, or to allow the Secretary access to such records, shall constitute a prima facie case.

"(b)(1) A recipient that has received written notice of a preliminary departmental decision and that desires to have such decision reviewed by the Office shall submit to the Office an application for review not later than 30 days after receipt of notice of the preliminary departmental decision. The application shall be in the form and contain the information specified by the Office. As expeditiously as possible, the Office shall return to the Secretary for such action as the Secretary considers appropriate any preliminary departmental decision which the Office determines does not meet the requirements of subsection (a)(2).

"(2) In cases where the preliminary departmental decision requests a recovery of funds from a State recipient, that State recipient may not recover funds from an affected local educational agency unless that State recipient has—

"(A) transmitted a copy of the preliminary departmental decision to any affected subrecipient within 10 days of the date that the State recipient in a State administered program received such written notice; and

"(B) consulted with each affected subrecipient to determine whether the State recipient should submit an application for review under paragraph (1).

"(3) In any proceeding before the Office under this section, the burden shall be upon the recipient to demonstrate that it should not be required to return the amount of funds for which recovery is sought in the preliminary departmental decision under subsection (a).

"(c) A hearing shall be set 90 days after receipt of a request for review of a preliminary departmental decision by the Office, except that such 90-day requirement may be waived at the discretion of the judge for good cause.

"(d) Upon review of a decision of the Office by the Secretary, the findings of fact by the Office, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. However, the Secretary, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Office to take further evidence, and the Office may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify its previous action. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

"(e) Parties to the proceeding shall have 30 days to file a petition for review of a decision of the administrative law judges with the Office of the Secretary.

"(f)(1) If a recipient submits a timely application for review of a preliminary departmental decision, the Secretary shall take no collection action until the decision of the Office upholding the preliminary Department decision in whole or in part becomes final agency action under subsection (g).

"(2) If a recipient files a timely petition for judicial review under section 458, the Secretary shall take no collection action until judicial review is completed.

"(3) The filing of an application for review under paragraph (1) or a petition for judicial review under paragraph (2) shall not affect the authority of the Secretary to take any other adverse action under this part against the recipient.

"(g) A decision of the Office regarding the review of a preliminary departmental decision shall become final agency action 60 days after the recipient receives written notice of the decision unless the Secretary either—

"(1) modifies or sets aside the decision, in whole or in part, in which case the decision of the Secretary shall become final agency action when the recipient receives written notice of the Secretary's action, or

"(2) remands the decision to the Office.

"(h) The Secretary shall publish decisions that have become final agency action under subsection (g) in the Federal Register or in another appropriate publication within 60 days.

"(i) The amount of a preliminary departmental decision under subsection (a) for which review has not been requested in accordance with subsection (b), and the amount sustained by a decision of the Office or the Secretary which becomes final agency action under subsection (g), may be collected by the Secretary in accordance with chapter 37 of title 31, United States Code.

"(j)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary may, subject to the notice requirements of paragraph (2), compromise any preliminary departmental decision under this section which does not exceed the amount agreed to be returned by more than $200,000, if the Secretary determines that (A) the collection of any or all or the amount thereof would not be practical or in the public interest, and (B) the practice which resulted in the preliminary departmental decision has been corrected and will not recur.

"(2) Not less than 45 days prior to the exercise of the authority to compromise a preliminary departmental decision pursuant to paragraph (1), the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register a notice of intention to do so. The notice shall provide interested persons an opportunity to comment on any proposed action under this subsection through the submission of written data, views, or arguments.

"(k) No recipient under an applicable program shall be liable to return funds which were expended in a manner not authorized by law more than 5 years before the recipient received written notice of a preliminary departmental decision.

"(l) No interest shall be charged arising from a claim during the administrative review of the preliminary departmental decision.

"SEC. 453. MEASURE OF RECOVERY.

"(a)(1) A recipient determined to have made an unallowable expenditure, or to have otherwise failed to discharge its responsibility to account properly for funds, shall be required to return funds in an amount that is proportionate to the extent of the harm its violation caused to an identifiable Federal interest associated with the program under which the recipient received the award. Such amount shall be reduced in whole or in part by an amount that is proportionate to the extent the mitigating circumstances caused the violation.

"(2) For the purpose of paragraph (1), an identifiable Federal interest includes, but is not limited to, serving only eligible beneficiaries; providing only authorized services or benefits; complying with expenditure requirements and conditions (such as set-aside, excess cost, maintenance of effort, comparability, supplement-not-supplant, and matching requirements); preserving the integrity of planning, application, recordkeeping, and reporting requirements; and maintaining accountability for the use of funds.

"(b)(1) When a State or local educational agency is determined to have made an unallowable expenditure, or to have otherwise failed to discharge its responsibility to account properly for funds, and mitigating circumstances exist, as described in paragraph (2), the judge shall reduce such amount by an amount that is proportionate to the extent the mitigating circumstances caused the violation. Furthermore, the judge is authorized to determine that no recovery is justified when mitigating circumstances warrant. The burden of demonstrating the existence of mitigating circumstances shall be upon the State or local educational agency.

"(2) For the purpose of paragraph (1), mitigating circumstances exist only when it would be unjust to compel the recovery of funds because the State or local educational agency—

"(A) actually and reasonably relied upon erroneous written guidance provided by the Department;

"(B) made an expenditure or engaged in a practice after—

"(i) the State or local educational agency submitted to the Secretary, in good faith, a written request for guidance with respect to the expenditure or practice at issue, and

"(ii) a Department official did not respond within 90 days of receipt by the Department of such request; or

"(C) actually and reasonably relied upon a judicial decree issued to the recipient.

"(3) A written request for guidance as described in paragraph (2) sent by certified mail (return receipt requested) shall be conclusive proof of receipt by the Department.

"(4) If the Secretary responds to a written request for guidance described in paragraph (2)(B) more than 90 days after its receipt, the State or local educational agency that submitted the request shall comply with the guidance received at the earliest practicable time.

"(5) In order to demonstrate the existence of the mitigating circumstances described in paragraph (2)(B), the State or local educational agency shall demonstrate that—

"(A) the written request for guidance accurately described the proposed expenditure or practice and included the facts necessary for a determination of its legality; and

"(B) the written request for guidance contained a certification by the chief legal officer of the State educational agency that such officer had examined the proposed expenditure or practice and believed the proposed expenditure or practice was permissible under then applicable State and Federal law; and

"(C) the State or local educational agency reasonably believed that the proposed expenditure or practice was permissible under then applicable State and Federal law.

"(6) The Secretary shall disseminate to State educational agencies responses to written requests for guidance, described in paragraph (5), that reflect significant interpretations of applicable law or policy.

"(c) The Secretary shall periodically review the written requests for guidance submitted under this section to determine the need for new or supplementary regulatory or other guidance under applicable programs.

"SEC. 454. REMEDIES FOR EXISTING VIOLATIONS.

"(a) Whenever the Secretary has reason to believe that any recipient of funds under any applicable program is failing to comply substantially with any requirement of law applicable to such funds, the Secretary may—

"(1) withhold further payments under that program, as authorized by section 455;

"(2) issue a complaint to compel compliance through a cease and desist order of the Office, as authorized by section 456;

"(3) enter into a compliance agreement with a recipient to bring it into compliance, as authorized by section 457; or

"(4) take any other action authorized by law with respect to the recipient.

"(b) Any action, or failure to take action, by the Secretary under this section shall not preclude the Secretary from seeking a recovery of funds under section 452.

"SEC. 455. WITHHOLDING.

"(a) In accordance with section 454, the Secretary may withhold from a recipient, in whole or in part, further payments (including payments for administrative costs) under an applicable program.

"(b) Before withholding payments, the Secretary shall notify the recipient, in writing, of—

"(1) the intent to withhold payments;

"(2) the factual and legal basis for the Secretary's belief that the recipient has failed to comply substantially with a requirement of law; and

"(3) an opportunity for a hearing to be held on a date at least 30 days after the notification has been sent to the recipient.

"(c) The hearing shall be held before the Office and shall be conducted in accordance with the rules prescribed pursuant to subsections (f) and (g) of section 451 of this Act.

"(d) Pending the outcome of any hearing under this section, the Secretary may suspend payments to a recipient, suspend the authority of the recipient to obligate Federal funds, or both, after such recipient has been given reasonable notice and an opportunity to show cause why future payments or authority to obligate Federal funds should not be suspended.

"(e) Upon review of a decision of the Office by the Secretary, the findings of fact by the Office, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. However, the Secretary, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Office to take further evidence, and the Office may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify its previous action. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

"(f) The decision of the Office in any hearing under this section shall become final agency action 60 days after the recipient receives written notice of the decision unless the Secretary either—

"(1) modifies or sets aside the decision, in whole or in part, in which case the decision of the Secretary shall become final agency action when the recipient receives written notice of the Secretary's action; or

"(2) remands the decision of the Office.

"SEC. 456. CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS.

"(a) In accordance with section 454, the Secretary may issue to a recipient under an applicable program a complaint which—

"(1) describes the factual and legal basis for the Secretary's belief that the recipient is failing to comply substantially with a requirement of law; and

"(2) contains a notice of a hearing to be held before the Office on a date at least 30 days after the service of the complaint.

"(b) The recipient upon which a complaint has been served shall have the right to appear before the Office on the date specified and to show cause why an order should not be entered by the Office requiring the recipient to cease and desist from the violation of law charged in the complaint.

"(c) The testimony in any hearing held under this section shall be reduced to writing and filed with the Office. If upon that hearing the Office is of the opinion that the recipient is in violation of any requirement of law as charged in the complaint, the Office shall—

"(1) make a report in writing stating its findings of fact; and

"(2) issue to the recipient an order requiring the recipient to cease and desist from the practice, policy, or procedure which resulted in the violation.

"(d) The report and order of the Office under this section shall become the final agency action when the recipient receives the report and order.

"(e) The Secretary may enforce a final order of the Office under this section which becomes final agency action by—

"(1) withholding from the recipient any portion of the amount payable to it, including the amount payable for administrative costs, under the applicable program; or

"(2) certifying the facts to the Attorney General who shall cause an appropriate proceeding to be brought for the enforcement of the order.

"SEC. 457. COMPLIANCE AGREEMENTS.

"(a) In accordance with section 454, the Secretary may enter into a compliance agreement with a recipient under an applicable program. The purpose of any compliance agreement under this section shall be to bring the recipient into full compliance with the applicable requirements of law as soon as feasible and not to excuse or remedy past violations of such requirements.

"(b)(1) Before entering into a compliance agreement with a recipient, the Secretary shall hold a hearing at which the recipient, affected students and parents or their representatives, and other interested parties are invited to participate. The recipient shall have the burden of persuading the Secretary that full compliance with the applicable requirements of law is not feasible until a future date.

"(2) If the Secretary determines, on the basis of all the evidence presented, that full compliance is genuinely not feasible until a future date, the Secretary shall make written findings to that effect and shall publish those findings, along with the substance of any compliance agreement, in the Federal Register.

"(c) A compliance agreement under this section shall contain—

"(1) an expiration date not later than 3 years from the date of the written findings under subsection (b)(2), by which the recipient shall be in full compliance with the applicable requirements of law, and

"(2) those terms and conditions with which the recipient must comply until it is in full compliance.

"(d) If a recipient fails to comply with the terms and conditions of a compliance agreement under this section, the Secretary may consider that compliance agreement to be no longer in effect, and the Secretary may take any action authorized by law with respect to the recipient.

"SEC. 458. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

"(a) Any recipient of funds under an applicable program that would be adversely affected by a final agency action under section 452, 455, or 456 of this Act, and any State entitled to receive funds under a program described in section 435(a) of this title whose application has been disapproved by the Secretary, shall be entitled to judicial review of such action in accordance with the provisions of this section. The Secretary may not take any action on the basis of a final agency action until judicial review is completed.

"(b) A recipient that desires judicial review of an action described in subsection (a) shall, within 60 days of that action, file with the United States Court of Appeals for the circuit in which that recipient is located, a petition for review of such action. A copy of the petition shall be transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Secretary. The Secretary shall file in the court the record of the proceedings on which the action was based, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

"(c) The findings of fact by the Office, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive; but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Office to take further evidence, and the Office may make new or modified findings of fact and may modify its previous action, and shall certify to the court the record of the further proceedings. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

"(d) The court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Office of the Secretary or to set it aside, in whole or in part. The judgment of the court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

"SEC. 459. USE OF RECOVERED FUNDS.

"(a) Whenever the Secretary recovers funds paid to a recipient under a grant or cooperative agreement made under an applicable program because the recipient made an expenditure of funds that was not allowable, or otherwise failed to discharge its responsibility to account properly for funds, the Secretary may consider those funds to be additional funds available for that program and may arrange to repay to the recipient affected by that action an amount not to exceed 75 percent of the recovered funds if the Secretary determines that—

"(1) the practices or procedures of the recipient that resulted in the violation of law have been corrected, and that the recipient is in all other respects in compliance with the requirements of that program;

"(2) the recipient has submitted to the Secretary a plan for the use of those funds pursuant to the requirements of that program and, to the extent possible, for the benefit of the population that was affected by the failure to comply or by the misuse of funds that resulted in the recovery; and

"(3) the use of those funds in accordance with that plan would serve to achieve the purposes of the program under which the funds were originally paid.

"(b) Any payments by the Secretary under this section shall be subject to such other terms and conditions as the Secretary considers necessary to accomplish the purposes of the affected programs, including—

"(1) the submission of periodic reports on the use of funds provided under this section; and

"(2) consultation by the recipient with students, parents, or representatives of the population that will benefit from the payments.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the funds made available under this section shall remain available for expenditure for a period of time deemed reasonable by the Secretary, but in no case to exceed more than 3 fiscal years following the fiscal year in which final agency action under section 452(e) is taken.

"(d) At least 30 days prior to entering into an arrangement under this section, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register a notice of intent to enter into such an arrangement and the terms and conditions under which payments will be made. Interested persons shall have an opportunity for at least 30 days to submit comments to the Secretary regarding the proposed arrangement.

"SEC. 460. DEFINITIONS.

"For purposes of this part:

"(ii) which are administered for the benefit of Indians through Bureau schools; and

"(C) all operation, maintenance, and repair funds for facilities and government quarters used in the operation or support of elementary and secondary education functions for the benefit of Indians, from whatever source derived.

"(3) The term 'tribal elementary or secondary educational programs' means all Bureau elementary and secondary functions, together with any other Bureau programs or portions of programs (excluding funds for social services that are appropriated to agencies other than the Bureau and are expended through the Bureau, funds for major subcontracts, construction, and other major capital expenditures, and unexpended funds carried over from prior years) which share common administrative cost functions, that are operated directly by a tribe or tribal organization under a contract or agreement with the Bureau.

"(4)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the direct cost base of a tribe or tribal organization for the fiscal year is the aggregate direct cost program funding for all tribal elementary or secondary educational programs operated by the tribe or tribal organization during—

"(i) the second fiscal year preceding such fiscal year, or

"(ii) if such programs have not been operated by the tribe or tribal organization during the 2 preceding fiscal years, the first fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.

"(B) In the case of Bureau elementary or secondary education functions which have not previously been operated by a tribe or tribal organization under contract or agreement with the Bureau, the direct cost base for the initial year shall be the projected aggregate direct cost program funding for all Bureau elementary and secondary functions to be operated by the tribe or tribal organization during that fiscal year.

"(5) The term 'maximum base rate' means 50 percent.

"(6) The term 'minimum base rate' means 11 percent.

"(7) The term 'standard direct cost base' means $600,000.

"(f)(1) Upon the enactment of the Indian Education Amendments of 1988, the Secretary shall—

"(A) conduct such studies as may be needed to establish an empirical basis for determining relevant factors substantially affecting the required administrative costs of tribal elementary and secondary educational programs, using the formula set forth in subsection (c), and

"(B) a study to determine—

"(i) a maximum base rate which ensures that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of the smallest tribal elementary or secondary educational programs,

"(ii) a minimum base rate which ensures that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of the largest tribal elementary or secondary educational programs, and

"(iii) a standard direct cost base which is the aggregate direct cost funding level for which the percentage determined under subsection (c) will—

"(I) be equal to the median between the maximum base rate and the minimum base rate, and

"(II) ensure that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of tribal elementary or secondary educational programs closest to the size of the program.

"(2) The studies required under paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) be conducted in full consultation (in accordance with section 1130) with—

"(i) the tribes and tribal organizations that are affected by the application of the formula set forth in subsection (c), and

"(ii) all national and regional Indian organizations of which such tribes and tribal organizations are typically members;

"(B) be conducted on-site at a representative statistical sample of the tribal elementary or secondary educational programs under a contract entered into with a nationally reputable public accounting and business consulting firm;

"(C) take into account the availability of skilled labor, commodities, business and automatic data processing services, related Indian preference and Indian control of education requirements, and any other market factors found substantially to affect the administrative costs and efficiency of each such tribal elementary or secondary educational program studied in order to assure that all required administrative activities can reasonably be delivered in a cost effective manner for each such program, given an administrative cost allowance generated by the values, percentages, or other factors found in the studies to be relevant in such formula;

"(D) identify, and quantify in terms of percentages of direct program costs, any general factors arising from geographic isolation, or numbers of programs administered, independent of program size factors used to compute a base administrative cost percentage in such formula; and

"(E) identify any other incremental cost factors substantially affecting the costs of required administrative cost functions at any of the tribal elementary or secondary educational programs studied and determine whether the factors are of general applicability to other such programs, and (if so) how they may effectively be incorporated into such formula.

"(3) Determinations described in paragraph (2)(C) shall be based on what is pragmatically possible to do at each location studied, given prudent management practice, irrespective of whether required administrative services were actually or fully delivered at these sites, or other services were delivered instead, during the period of the study.

"(4) Upon completion of the studies conducted under paragraph (1), but in no case later than October 1, 1989, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report on the findings of the studies, together with determinations based upon such findings that would affect the definitions of terms used in the formula that is set forth in subsection (c).

"(5) The Secretary shall include in the Bureau's justification for each appropriations request for each fiscal year beginning after fiscal year 1989, a projection of the overall costs associated with the formula set forth in subsection (c) for all tribal elementary or secondary educational programs which the Secretary expects to be funded in the fiscal year for which the appropriations are sought.

"(6) For purposes of this subsection, the size of tribal elementary or secondary educational programs is determined by the aggregate direct cost program funding level for all Bureau funded programs which share common administrative cost functions.

"(g)(1) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"(2) If the total amount of funds necessary to provide grants to tribes and tribal organizations in the amounts determined under subsection (b) for a fiscal year exceeds the amount of funds appropriated to carry out this section for such fiscal year, the Secretary shall reduce the amount of each grant determined under subsection (b) for such fiscal year by an amount that bears the same relationship to such excess as the amount of such grant determined under subsection (b) bears to the total of all grants determined under subsection (b) for all tribes and tribal organizations for such fiscal year.

"(h)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount of the grants provided under this section for fiscal year 1989 shall—

"(A) in lieu of being determined under subsection (b), be determined for each tribal elementary or secondary educational program on the same basis that indirect costs were determined for such programs for fiscal year 1988, and

"(B) be subject to the provisions of subsection (d).

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount of the grant provided under this section for fiscal year 1990 with respect to each tribal elementary and secondary educational program that was operated by a tribe or tribal organization in fiscal year 1989 shall be equal to—

"(A) if the amount of the grant determined under subsection (b) for fiscal year 1990 with respect to such program exceeds the amount received by the tribe or tribal organization with respect to such program for administrative costs for fiscal year 1988 (or fiscal year 1989 if such program was not operated by the tribe or tribal organization during fiscal year 1988), the sum of—

"(i) such amount received, plus

"(ii) one third of the excess of—

"(I) such amount determined under subsection (b), over

"(II) such amount received, or

"(B) if such amount received exceeds such amount determined under subsection (b), the excess of—

"(i) such amount received, over

"(ii) an amount equal to one third of the excess of—

"(I) such amount received, over

"(II) such amount determined under subsection (b).

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the amount of the grants provided under this section for fiscal year 1991 with respect to each tribal elementary and secondary educational program that was operated by a tribe or tribal organization in fiscal year 1989 shall be equal to—

"(A) if the amount of the grant determined under subsection (b) for fiscal year 1991 with respect to such program exceeds the amount received by the tribe or tribal organization with respect to such program for administrative costs for fiscal year 1990, the sum of—

"(i) such amount received, plus

"(ii) one half of the excess of—

"(I) such amount determined under subsection (b), over

"(II) such amount received, or

"(B) if such amount received exceeds such amount determined under subsection (b), the excess of—

"(i) such amount received, over

"(ii) an amount equal to one half of the excess of—

"(I) such amount received over,

"(II) such amount determined under subsection (b).".

If the contract for such training is not awarded before May 1 of each fiscal year, the contract under which such training was provided for the fiscal year preceding such fiscal year shall be renewed by the Secretary for such fiscal year. The agenda for the training sessions shall be established by the school boards through their regional or national organizations.

"(B) For each year in which the Secretary uses a weighted unit formula established under subsection (a) to fund Bureau schools, a Bureau school which generates less than 168 weighted units shall receive an additional 2 weighted units to defray school board activities.

"(C) From the funds allotted in accordance with the formula established under subsection (a) for each Bureau school, the local school board of such school may reserve an amount which does not exceed the greater of—

PART B—TRIBALLY CONTROLLED SCHOOL GRANTS

SEC. 5201. SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as the "Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988".

SEC. 5202. FINDINGS.

The Congress, after careful review of the Federal Government's historical and special legal relationship with, and resulting responsibilities to, Indians, finds that—

(1) the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, which was a product of the legitimate aspirations and a recognition of the inherent authority of Indian nations, was and is a crucial positive step towards tribal and community control;

(2) the Bureau of Indian Affairs' administration and domination of the contracting process under such Act has not provided the full opportunity to develop leadership skills crucial to the realization of self-government, and has denied to the Indian people an effective voice in the planning and implementation of programs for the benefit of Indians which are responsive to the true needs of Indian communities;

(3) Indians will never surrender their desire to control their relationships both among themselves and with the non-Indian governments, organizations, and persons;

(4) true self-determination in any society of people is dependent upon an educational process which will ensure the development of qualified people to fulfill meaningful leadership roles;

(5) the Federal administration of education for Indian children has not effected the desired level of educational achievement nor created the diverse opportunities and personal satisfaction which education can and should provide;

(6) true local control requires the least possible Federal interference; and

(7) the time has come to enhance the concepts made manifest in the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act.

SEC. 5203. DECLARATION OF POLICY.

(a) RECOGNITION.—The Congress recognizes the obligation of the United States to respond to the strong expression of the Indian people for self-determination by assuring maximum Indian participation in the direction of educational services so as to render such services more responsive to the needs and desires of those communities.

(b) COMMITMENT.—The Congress declares its commitment to the maintenance of the Federal Government's unique and continuing trust relationship with and responsibility to the Indian people through the establishment of a meaningful Indian self-determination policy for education which will deter further perpetuation of Federal bureaucratic domination of programs.

(c) NATIONAL GOAL.—The Congress declares that a major national goal of the United States is to provide the resources, processes, and structures which will enable tribes and local communities to effect the quantity and quality of educational services and opportunities which will permit Indian children to compete and excel in the life areas of their choice, and to achieve the measure of self-determination essential to their social and economic well-being.

(d) EDUCATIONAL NEEDS.—The Congress affirms the reality of the special and unique educational needs of Indian peoples, including the need for programs to meet the linguistic and cultural aspirations of Indian tribes and communities. These may best be met through a grant process.

(e) FEDERAL RELATIONS.—The Congress declares its commitment to these policies and its support, to the full extent of its responsibility, for Federal relations with the Indian Nations.

(f) TERMINATION.—The Congress hereby repudiates and rejects House Concurrent Resolution 108 of the 83rd Congress and any policy of unilateral termination of Federal relations with any Indian Nation.

SEC. 5204. GRANTS AUTHORIZED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) The Secretary shall provide grants to Indian tribes, and tribal organizations, that—

(A) operate tribally controlled schools which are eligible for assistance under this part, and

(B) submit to the Secretary applications for such grants.

(2) Grants provided under this part shall be deposited into the general operating fund of the tribally controlled school with respect to which the grant is provided.

(3)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, grants provided under this part shall be used to defray, at the discretion of the school board of the tribally controlled school with respect to which the grant is provided, any expenditures for education-related activities for which any funds that compose the grant may be used under the laws described in section 5205(a), including but not limited to, expenditures for—

(i) school operations, academic, educational, residential, guidance and counseling, and administrative purposes, and

(ii) support services for the school, including transportation.

(B) Grants provided under this part may, at the discretion of the school board of the tribally controlled school with respect to which such grant is provided, be used to defray operation and maintenance expenditures for the school if any funds for the operation and maintenance of the school are allocated to the school under the provisions of any of the laws described in section 5205(a).

(C) If funds allocated to a tribally controlled school under chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, the Education of the Handicapped Act, or any Federal education law other than title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978 are included in a grant provided under this part, a portion of the grant equal to the amount of the funds allocated under such law shall be expended only for those activities for which funds provided under such law may be expended under the terms of such law.

(b) Limitations.—

(1) No more than one grant may be provided under this part with respect to any Indian tribe or tribal organization for any fiscal year.

(2) Funds provided under any grant made under this part may not be used in connection with religious worship or sectarian instruction.

(3) Funds provided under any grant made under this part may not be expended for administrative costs (as defined under section 1128A(e)(1) of the Education Amendments of 1978) in excess of the amount generated for such costs under section 1128A of such Act.

(c) Limitation on Transfer of Funds Among Schoolsites.—

(1) In the case of a grantee which operates schools at more than one schoolsite, the grantee may expend no more than the lesser of—

(A) 10 percent of the funds allocated for a schoolsite under section 1128 of the Education Amendments of 1978, or

(B) $400,000 of such funds,

at any other schoolsite.

(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term "schoolsite" means the physical location and the facilities of an elementary or secondary educational or residential program operated by, or under contract with, the Bureau for which a discreet student count is identified under the funding formula established under section 1128 of the Education Amendments of 1978.

(d) No Requirement To Accept Grants.—Nothing in this part may be construed—

(1) to require a tribe or tribal organization to apply for or accept, or

(2) to allow any person to coerce any tribe or tribal organization into applying for, or accepting, a grant under this part to plan, conduct, and administer all of, or any portion of, any Bureau program. Such applications, and the timing of such applications, shall be strictly voluntary. Nothing in this part may be construed as allowing or requiring any grant with any entity other than the entity to which the grant is provided.

(e) No Effect on Federal Responsibility.—Grants provided under this part shall not terminate, modify, suspend, or reduce the responsibility of the Federal Government to provide a program.

(f) Retrocession.—Whenever an Indian tribe requests retrocession of any program for which assistance is provided under this part, such retrocession shall become effective upon a date specified by the Secretary not more than 120 days after the date on which the tribe requests the retrocession, or such later date as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary and the tribe. If such a program is retroceded, the Secretary shall provide to any Indian tribe served by such program at least the same quantity and quality of services that would have been provided under such program at the level of funding provided under this part prior to the retrocession.

(g) No Termination for Administrative Convenience.—Grants provided under this Act may not be terminated, modified, suspended, or reduced only for the convenience of the administering agency.

SEC. 5205. COMPOSITION OF GRANTS.

(a) In General.—The grant provided under this part to an Indian tribe or tribal organization for any fiscal year shall consist of—

(1) the total amount of funds allocated for such fiscal year under sections 1128 and 1128A of the Education Amendments of 1978 with respect to the tribally controlled schools eligible for assistance under this part that are operated by such Indian tribe or tribal organization, including, but not limited to, funds provided under such sections, or under any other provision of law, for transportation costs,

(2) In the allocation of funds provided under—

(A) chapter 1 of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965,

(B) the Education of the Handicapped Act, and

(C) any other Federal education law, that are distributed through the Bureau, tribally controlled schools for which grants are provided under this part shall be treated as Bureau schools.

(3)(A) Funds allocated to a tribally controlled school by reason of paragraph (1) or (2) shall be subject to the provisions of this part and shall not be subject to any additional restriction, priority, or limitation that is imposed by the Bureau with respect to funds provided under—

(i) title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965,

(ii) the Education of the Handicapped Act, or

(iii) any Federal education law other than title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978.

(B) Indian tribes and tribal organizations to which grants are provided under this part, and tribally controlled schools for which such grants are provided, shall not be subject to any requirements, obligations, restrictions, or limitations imposed by the Bureau that would otherwise apply solely by reason of the receipt of funds provided under any law referred to in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A).

SEC. 5206. ELIGIBILITY FOR GRANTS.

(a) In General.—

(1) A tribally controlled school is eligible for assistance under this part if the school—

(A) was, on the date of enactment of this Act, a school which received funds under the authority of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450, et seq.),

(B) was a school operated (as either an elementary or secondary school or a combined program) by the Bureau and has met the requirements of subsection (b),

(C) is a school for which the Bureau has not provided funds, but which has met the requirements of subsection (c), or

(b) Additional Requirements for Bureau Schools and Certain Electing Schools.—

(1) Any school that was operated as a Bureau school on the date of enactment of this Act, and any school with respect to which an election is made under subsection (a)(2), meets the requirements of this subsection if—

(A) the Indian tribe or tribal organization that operates, or desires to operate, the school submits to the Secretary an application requesting that the Secretary—

(i) transfer operation of the school to the Indian tribe or tribal organization, if the Indian tribe or tribal organization is not already operating the school, and

(ii) make a determination of whether the school is eligible for assistance under this part, and

(B) the Secretary makes a determination that the school is eligible for assistance under this part.

(2)(A) By no later than the date that is 120 days after the date on which an application is submitted to the Secretary under paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary shall determine—

(i) if the school is not being operated by the Indian tribe or tribal organization, whether to transfer operation of the school to the Indian tribe or tribal organization, and

(ii) whether the school is eligible for assistance under this part.

(B) In considering applications submitted under paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary—

(i) shall transfer operation of the school to the Indian tribe or tribal organization, if the Indian tribe or tribal organization is not already operating the school, and

(ii) shall determine that the school is eligible for assistance under this part,

unless the Secretary finds by clear and convincing evidence that the services to be provided by the Indian tribe or tribal organization will be deleterious to the welfare of the Indians served by the school.

(C) In considering applications submitted under paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary shall consider whether the Indian tribe or tribal organization would be deficient in operating the school with respect to—

(i) equipment,

(ii) bookkeeping and accounting procedures,

(iii) substantive knowledge of operating the school,

(iv) adequately trained personnel, or

(v) any other necessary components in the operation of the school.

(c) Additional Requirements for Schools That Have Not Received Bureau Funds.—

(1) A school for which the Bureau has not provided funds meets the requirements of this subsection if—

(IV) the history and success of these services for the proposed population to be served, as determined from all factors and not just standardized examination performance.

(C) The Secretary may not make a determination under this paragraph that is primarily based upon the geographic proximity of comparable public education.

(D) Applications submitted under paragraph (1)(A) shall include information on the factors described in subparagraph (B)(i), but the applicant may also provide the Secretary such information relative to the factors described in subparagraph (B)(ii) as the applicant considers appropriate.

(E) If the Secretary fails to make a determination under subparagraph (A) with respect to an application within 180 days after the date on which the Secretary received the application, the Secretary shall be treated as having made a determination that the tribally controlled school is eligible for assistance under the title and the grant shall become effective 18 months after the date on which the Secretary received the application, or an earlier date, at the Secretary's discretion.

(d) Applications and Reports.—

(1) All applications and reports submitted to the Secretary under this part, and any amendments to such applications or reports, shall be filed with the agency or area education officer designated by the Director of the Office of Indian Education of the Department of Education. The date on which such filing occurs shall, for purposes of this part, be treated as the date on which the application or amendment is submitted to the Secretary.

(e) Effective Date for Approved Applications.—Except as provided in subsection (c)(2)(E), a grant provided under this part, and any transfer of the operation of a Bureau school made under subsection (b), shall become effective beginning with the academic year succeeding the fiscal year in which the application for the grant or transfer is made, or at an earlier date determined by the Secretary.

(f) Denial of Applications.—

(1) Whenever the Secretary declines to provide a grant under this part, to transfer operation of a Bureau school under subsection (b), or determines that a school is not eligible for assistance under this part, the Secretary shall—

(A) state the objections in writing to the tribe or tribal organization within the allotted time,

(B) provide assistance to the tribe or tribal organization to overcome all stated objections,

(C) provide the tribe or tribal organization a hearing, under the same rules and regulations that apply under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, and

SEC. 5207. DURATION OF ELIGIBILITY DETERMINATION.

(a) In General.—If the Secretary determines that a tribally controlled school is eligible for assistance under this part, the eligibility determination shall remain in effect until the determination is revoked by the Secretary, and the requirements of subsection (b) or (c) of section 5206, if applicable, shall be considered to have been met with respect to such school until the eligibility determination is revoked by the Secretary.

(b) Annual Reports.—Each recipient of a grant provided under this part shall submit to the Secretary and to the tribal governing body (within the meaning of section 1121(j) of the Education Amendments of 1978) of the tribally controlled school an annual report that shall be limited to—

(c) Revocation of Eligibility.—

(1)(A) The Secretary shall not revoke a determination that a school is eligible for assistance under this part if—

(i) the Indian tribe or tribal organization submits the reports required under subsection (b) with respect to the school, and

(ii) at least one of the following subclauses applies with respect to the school:

(I) The school is certified or accredited by a State or regional accrediting association as determined by the Secretary of Education, or is a candidate in good standing for such accreditation under the rules of the State or regional accrediting association, showing that credits achieved by students within the education programs are, or will be, accepted at grade level by a State certified or regionally accredited institution.

(III) The school is accredited by a tribal department of education if such accreditation is accepted by a generally recognized regional or State accreditation agency.

(IV) The school accepts the standards promulgated under section 1121 of the Education Amendments of 1978 and an evaluation of performance is conducted under this section in conformance with the regulations pertaining to Bureau operated schools by an impartial evaluator chosen by the grantee, but no grantee shall be required to comply with these standards to a higher degree than a comparable Bureau operated school.

(V) A positive evaluation of the school is conducted once every 3 years under standards adopted by the contractor under a contract for a school entered into under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act prior to the date of enactment of this Act, such evaluation to be conducted by an impartial evaluator agreed to by the Secretary and the grantee. Upon failure to agree on such an evaluator, the governing body of the tribe shall choose the evaluator or perform the evaluation.

(B) The choice of standards employed for purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be consistent with section 1121(e) of the Education Amendments of 1978.

(2) The Secretary shall not revoke a determination that a school is eligible for assistance under this part, or reassume control of a school that was a Bureau school prior to approval of an application submitted under section 5206(b)(1)(A), until the Secretary—

(A) provides notice to the tribally controlled school and the tribal governing body (within the meaning of section 1121(j) of the Education Amendments of 1978) of the tribally controlled school which states—

(i) the specific deficiencies that led to the revocation or resumption determination, and

(ii) the actions that are needed to remedy such deficiencies, and

(B) affords such authority an opportunity to effect any remedial actions.

The Secretary shall provide such technical assistance as is necessary to effect such remedial actions. Such notice and technical assistance shall be in addition to a hearing and appeal to be conducted pursuant to the regulations described in section 5206(f)(1)(C).

PART C—DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

SEC. 5301. SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as the "Indian Education Act of 1988".

Subpart 1—Financial Assistance to Local Educational Agencies for the Education of Indian Children

SEC. 5311. DECLARATION OF POLICY.

In recognition of the special educational and culturally related academic needs of Indian students in the United States, Congress hereby declares it to be the policy of the United States to provide financial assistance to local educational agencies to develop and carry out elementary and secondary school programs specially designed to meet these special educational and culturally related academic needs, or both.

SEC. 5312. GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, in order to effectuate the policy set forth in section 5311, carry out a program of making grants to local educational agencies which are entitled to payments under this subpart and which have submitted, and have had approved, applications therefor, in accordance with the provisions of this subpart.

(b) AMOUNT OF GRANTS.—

(1)(A) For any fiscal year for which appropriations are authorized under section 5316 of this Act, the Secretary shall determine the number of eligible Indian children who were enrolled in the schools of a local educational agency, and for whom such agency provided free public education, during such fiscal year.

(B) For purposes of this subpart, the term "eligible Indian children" means Indian children whom the Secretary has determined—

(i) were enrolled in a school of the local educational agency, and

(ii) were provided free public education by the local educational agency.

(2)(A) From the sums appropriated under section 5316(a) for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall allocate to each local educational agency which has an application approved under this subpart an amount which bears the same ratio to such sums as the product of—

(i) the number of eligible Indian children, multiplied by

(ii) the average per pupil expenditure per local educational agency, bears to the sum of such products for all such local educational agencies.

(B) A local educational agency shall not be entitled to receive a grant under this subpart for any fiscal year unless the number of eligible Indian children, with respect to such agency, is at least 10 or constitutes at least 50 percent of its total enrollment. The requirements of this subparagraph shall not apply to any local educational agencies serving Indian children in Alaska, California, and Oklahoma or located on, or in proximity to, an Indian reservation.

(C) For the purposes of this subsection, the average per pupil expenditure for a local educational agency is equal to the amount determined by dividing—

(i) the sum of—

(I) the aggregate current expenditures, during the second fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which the computation is made, of all of the local educational agencies in the State in which such agency is located, plus

(II) any direct current expenditures by such State for the operation of such agencies (without regard to the sources of funds from which either of such expenditures are made), by

(ii) the aggregate number of children who were in average daily attendance for whom such agencies provided free public education during such preceding fiscal year.

(3)(A) The first fiscal year for which schools operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs of the Department of the Interior shall be treated as local educational agencies for the purposes of this subpart (other than sections 5314(b)(2)(B)(ii) and 5315(c)(2)) is the first fiscal year beginning after the date of enactment of this Act for which the amount of funds appropriated for allocation under this subsection equals or exceeds the amount of funds that, if such schools are not treated as local educational agencies, is necessary to allocate under paragraph (2) (determined without regard to subparagraph (B)) to each local educational agency which has an application approved under this subpart for such fiscal year an amount of funds for each eligible Indian child equal to the sum of—

(i) the average amount of funds per eligible Indian child that was received by such local educational agency for fiscal year 1988 under section 303(a)(2) of the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act (20 U.S.C. 241bb(a)(2)), plus

(6) provide for such fiscal control and fund accounting procedures as may be necessary to assure proper disbursement of, and accounting for, Federal funds paid to the applicant under this subpart; and

(7) provide for making an annual report and such other reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary may reasonably require to carry out his functions under this subpart and to determine the extent to which funds provided under this subpart have been effective in improving the educational opportunities of Indian students in the area served, and for the keeping of such records, and the affording of such access thereto, as the Secretary may find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports.

(3) Nothing in the requirements of paragraph (2) may be construed as affecting the definition set forth in section 5351(4). The failure of an applicant to furnish any information listed in paragraph (2) with respect to any child shall have no bearing on the determination of whether the child is an eligible Indian child.

(4) The forms and the standards of proof (including the standard of good faith compliance) that were in use during the 1985-1986 academic year to establish a child's eligibility for entitlement under the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act shall be the only forms and standards of proof used to establish such eligibility and to meet the requirements of paragraph (1) after the date of enactment of this Act.

(5) For purposes of determining whether a child is an eligible Indian child, the membership of the child, or any parent or grandparent of the child, in a tribe, band, or other organized group of Indians may be established by proof other than an enrollment number, even if enrollment numbers for members of such tribe, band, or groups are available. (i) relate to the date of completion, or the date of submission, of any forms used to establish a child's eligibility for entitlement under the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act, and

(ii) are the subject of any administrative or judicial proceeding pending on the date of enactment of this Act.

"(2) The State educational agency shall reduce the amount of the allocation of funds under this subpart in any fiscal year in the exact proportion to which a local educational agency fails to meet the requirement of paragraph (1) by falling below 90 percent of both the combined fiscal effort per student and aggregate expenditures (using the measure most favorable to such local agency), and no such lesser amount shall be used for computing the effort required under paragraph (1) for subsequent years.

"(3) The State educational agency may waive, for 1 fiscal year only, the requirements of this subsection if the State educational agency determines that such a waiver would be equitable due to exceptional or uncontrollable circumstances such as a natural disaster or a precipitous and unforeseen decline in the financial resources of the local educational agency.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLILEY] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] or his designee from the majority party will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLILEY].

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Helms-Bliley amendment which contains the same legislative language as H.R. 1786, The Telephone Decency Act, which I introduced just over one year ago. That legislation has been cosponsored by 171 Members of this House and represents an important step in the fight against telephone pornography.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Telephone Decency Act is to amend the section 223 of the Communications Act of 1934 to prohibit the transmission of obscene and indecent communications for commercial purposes by means of telephone to any person, regardless of age. This amendment is necessary as the history of the fight to restrict pornographic telephone services will show.

The original section 223, as passed in 1968, prohibited obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy or indecent communications by means of the telephone. The law did not state that the maker of the comment must also be the maker of the call, so the service, dial-a-porn, in which a caller accesses by telephone a recorded message of a sexually explicit nature, was clearly covered by the language of the statute. However, because dial-it services did not exist when the law passed, the FCC claimed uncertainty concerning its ability to act.

In September of 1983, I proposed an amendment to the Federal Communications Commission reauthorization legislation which would have clarified the law by stating that the pornographic communications were prohibited regardless of who placed the call. This amendment was adopted unanimously by the members of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, which had jurisdiction over the authorizing legislation.

However, on the last day of the legislative session of the House in 1983, an agreement was reached on the House floor to replace the text of this amendment with that which we have in the law today. Members of the Judiciary Committee made it quite clear that they would demand a sequential referral to their committee if their language was not accepted. The substitute permitted obscene and indecent communications to adults but not to children. It also required the FCC to report regulations describing methods by which dial-a-porn providers could screen out underage callers, and specified that compliance with such regulations constituted "* * * a defense to a prosecution." The President signed this legislation into law on December 8, 1983.

The FCC has attempted three times to satisfy the requirement of the 1983 amendment which instructed it to formulate procedures which would prevent children from gaining access to dial-a-porn without great inconvenience to adults. The first set of regulations, which placed time-of-day restrictions on dial-a-porn, were set aside by the Second Circuit Court of Appeals. The court rightly judged that these restrictions did not place much of the barrier between the children and pornographic telephone services. On October 16, 1985, the FCC released new regulations requiring an authorized access or identification code or payment by credit card. Carlin Communications, Inc., challenged these regulations and the second circuit held a hearing on the matter on December 19, 1985. The regulations were scheduled to go into effect on November 25, 1985, but the FCC issued a stay pending court review. The new date on which they were scheduled to take effect was December 26, but on December 20 the court, out of concern for the business interests of the purveyors of the pornographic messages, issued another stay pending its decision.

On April 11, 1986, the Second Circuit Court set aside the FCC's second set of regulations for those services operating under the New York telephone system for the reason that "there was no evidence that access codes are technically feasible under the NYT system * * *." The court also concluded, in its majority opinion, that "the record contained insufficient evidence that access codes are the least restrictive means of limiting minors' access to dial-a-porn * * *." This opinion was based, not on first amendment grounds, but on what the court interpreted to be Congress' intent in passing the 1983 amendment. In July of 1986, the FCC issued its third notice of proposed rulemaking and in May of 1987 issued its final rules. These regulations are currently being challenged by Carlin Communications. In the meantime, tens of millions of telephone calls are being made to dial-a-porn messages without the slightest hindrance to minors.

In the more than 4 years during which dial-a-porn has been technically illegal, these services have spread from New York to many other major cities around the United States. A representative from Pacific Telesis testified at a Telecommunications Subcommittee hearing in 1986 that the company was forced to carry these "adult entertainment" services.

The amendment my colleagues and I are supporting today, the Helms-Bliley amendment, will stop this abuse of telephone communication once and for all. The changes we are suggesting are simple and take into consideration

Supreme Court decisions with regard to obscene and indecent speech. In fact, we are doing nothing beyond restoring the original intent of my 1983 amendment which, you will remember, was a clarification of the law. It was not until 1983 that obscene and indecent communications over the telephone became legal. Our purpose is to restore, not change. Parents around the country are demanding that we rectify the situation.

This amendment is constitutional. We have many court decisions stating clearly that obscenity is not protected by the Constitution. To quote Roth versus United States, "We hold that obscenity is not within the area of constitutionally protected speech." Though in Stanley versus Georgia the court ruled that adults may possess obscene material in their homes, the Justices ruled in United States versus Orito that this does not create a correlative right to receive it, transport it, or distribute it.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of important points regarding the effect and the intent of this legislation. This legislation is intended to prohibit transmission of obscene and indecent material for commercial purposes by means of telephone. It is the intent of this legislation that any communication made for commercial purposes means any communication that is made in furtherance of—and as a regular part of—the conduct of a business. It is further intended that a common carrier not be liable for prosecution under 47 U.S.C. 223(b) if the common carrier does not exercise editorial control over the communication, does not have an equity interest in the vendor providing the communication, and refers complaints alleging violation of section 223(b) to the appropriate regulatory and law enforcement agencies. Equity interest does not mean any incidental ownership, such as pension fund investment, in entities providing such illegal communications that the common carrier is unaware of.

It is also the intent of this legislation that common carriers not be subject to civil suits arising out of their cooperation with appropriate regulatory and law enforcement agencies in conducting investigations of potential violations of section 223(b).

Mr. Speaker, I supported the initial effort to provide conferees with the latitude necessary to arrive at a content neutral, technological solution. After 4 months of negotiations between the various staffs and groups concerned with this issue, it became clear that there was not a technological solution that would adequately and effectively protect our children from the effects of this material. We looked for effective alternatives to a ban—there were none.

First, we looked at an across the board subscription requirement for all dial-a-porn services. Vendors of other legitimate information services and phone companies presented evidence to suggest that such an approach would put legitimate information providers out of business, while allowing dial-a-porn services to survive. Additionally, it became clear that in many parts of the country it would be impossible to adequately prevent access to this material by children. For instance, in California alone, blocking cannot be accomplished for some 12 percent of residential phones—more than 3 million.

Second, we looked at customer requested blocking of telephones. Again, this approach was deficient. It placed the onus for preventing access to dial-a-porn on the telephone subscriber. Further, it would not have prevented cases where a child uses an unblocked telephone other than the one in his home to access dial-a-porn. We have direct knowledge of cases where young boys and girls have gained access through phones—not under their parents control—and then proceeded to act out the sex acts they had heard described. It is our view that this approach would have failed to deal effectively with the problem.

Third, we came to the solution offered as part of the conference report. It is deficient for several reasons, some of which were discussed in connection with an across the board dial-it services subscription requirement. Additionally, because it reintroduced content into the discussion it raised first amendment concerns by discriminating between forms of legally protected—as opposed to constitutionally protected—speech. While obscene or protected, current law—47 U.S.C. 223(b)—gives legal protection to obscene or indecent communications.

The constitutionality of the Helms-Bliley amendment has been questioned by some. Those concerns are misplaced. The proposed ban on obscene or indecent telephone communications for commercial purposes is constitutional. Following is a constitutional analysis of relevant case law which supports the constitutionality of the Telephone Decency Act—or the Helms-Bliley amendment.

MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN SUPPORT OF H.R. 1786, "TELEPHONE DECENCY ACT"

This legislation amends Section 223(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. § 223(b)), and as amended will prohibit obscene and indecent communications by means of telephone to any person, regardless of age. It is the purpose of this memorandum of law to demonstrate the need for this legislation, and to provide supporting legal authority for its enactment.

I. THE HISTORY OF DIAL-A-PORN AND THE FAILURE OF PREVIOUS LEGISLATIVE EFFORTS

Today, any child in America can hear hardcore sexually explicit messages on the country's telephone system. These recorded and live so-called "dial-a-porn" messages contain graphic descriptions of ultimate sex acts, both heterosexual and homosexual, sadomasochism, of incest, bondage, and sex with animals. Attorneys representing this industry are admitting that dial-a-porn is openly available to children, but according to them:

"The exposure of this material to children is the price we must pay for a free society." Carlin Communications, Inc., et al. v. The Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Company, et al. CIV. 85-1420 (D. Ariz. 1985) (transcript of proceedings). In every major city across this country, dial-a-porn telephone services became readily accessible to children by mid-1985, with Federal and State law enforcement agencies apparently unable or unwilling to stop it.

This dial-a-porn "industry" is still in its infancy, dating back to March of 1983. Yet, in less than four years, it grew from only one service operating nationally from its New York headquarters, to many services operating in every major city. The messages continue to become more sexually explicit and deviant in their content.

When dial-a-porn first became available in March 1983, it should have been prosecuted under already existing federal law. 47 U.S.C. Section 223 of the Federal Code then provided: "(a) Whoever—(1) in the District of Columbia or in interstate or foreign communication by means of telephone—(A) makes any comment, request, suggestion or proposal which is obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, or indecent . . . shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than six months or both." Section 223, by its plain meaning, should have been used by the FCC and the Department of Justice (DOJ) to control dial-a-porn services. However, throughout 1983, the FCC and DOJ issued letters to one another and to the general public creating every possible excuse as to why Section 223 could not be enforced.

The FCC went on record as ruling: "Section 223(1)(A) applies only to persons who utter obscene or indecent words during calls they place." "Second Report and Order," Gen. Docket No. 83-989 (Oct. 16 1985) (emphasis added). According to the FCC, since dial-a-porn vendors did not "place" the calls, Section 223 did not apply to them. This restrictive and erroneous interpretation given Section 223 by the FCC resulted in a lack of legal action taken against dial-a-porn during its first year of operation. The FCC refused to take administrative action, and the DOJ refused to take criminal or civil court action. Such lack of prosecution allowed the services to flourish. Meanwhile, the content of the messages became far more sexually explicit, moving from merely "indecent" suggestive language, to language which clearly fell within the restrictions of both state and federal obscenity legislation.

Congress became frustrated at the lack of legal action taken against dial-a-porn and, in late 1983, amended Section 223, making it a crime to make "any obscene or indecent communication for commercial purposes to any person under 18 years of age or to any other person without that person's consent." 47 U.S.C. Section 223(b)(1)(A) (emphasis added). In so amending Section 223 Congress "legalized" dial-a-porn. For the first time in the history of this country, obscene material was de-criminalized for "Consenting adults." This legalization of obscene dial-a-porn messages for consenting adults directly violated legal precedent as established by the Supreme Court in cases such as Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49 (1973), which rejected the "consenting adults" defense.

In amending 223, Congress further provided that the FCC was to issue regulations which would deny access to dial-a-porn services to persons under 18 years of age. Compliance with these regulations would be a complete defense to liability under Section 223. In other words, even if a minor breaks through the restrictions and calls dial-a-porn, the dealer, having complied with FCC regulations, cannot be prosecuted. It is now clear that no regulations from the FCC will adequately protect children from these dial-a-porn services.

The history of this issue reveals two major flaws in the 1983 amendments to section 223 which have resulted in the failure to control dial-a-porn. First, legalizing dial-a-porn for "consenting adults" was contrary to the decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court and placed Section 223 in conflict with all other federal obscenity statutes. Consequently, the legalization of dial-a-porn assured that it would always be accessible to children. The second major flaw in the 1983 legislation was to give the FCC the power to issue defenses to liability under § 223(b)(2)—the FCC has demonstrated its inability to issue workable regulations that will protect children.

Finally, as a result of the 1983 legislation and of the indecision by the FCC on this matter, the courts and the law enforcement community are in a state of confusion concerning the control and/or prosecution of dial-a-porn distributors. At this time, federal prosecutors will not prosecute the distributors of obscene dial-a-porn messages, even where they have been blatantly available to the children. The reason for this lack of federal enforcement is the belief that dial-a-porn distributors can only be prosecuted under § 223(b) and under none of the other federal obscenity laws.[1] state law enforcement authorities will not prosecute because of the confusion in the federal arena, fear of legal action by the dial-a-porn industry against state officials, and a mistaken belief that the FCC has preempted this field of law. At this time, there are no federal or state criminal cases pending against dial-a-porn distributors—they are operating freely, sensing a complete immunity from prosecution.

II. THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO 47 U.S.C. 223 DOES NOT VIOLATE A DIAL-A-PORN RECIPIENT'S RIGHT TO PRIVACY OR RIGHT TO ACCESS

The first objection that may be leveled at this legislation is that it violates a customer's right to receive dial-a-porn messages. As will be shown, this criticism is without merit. It is well settled that obscenity, in whatever form, is not protected by the First Amendment. Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 115 (1973); Kaplan v. California, 413 U.S. 115 (1973). Hence, the states and federal government may lawfully prohibit its commercial distribution, whether telephonically or through other media. Id. The Supreme Court has made clear that the "mere private possession of obscene materials" in the home cannot be made a crime. Stanley v. Georgia, 394 U.S. 557 (1967). However, there is no correlative right to purchase obscenity in the public marketplace or to have it distributed to your house through channels of public commerce. In United States v. 12 200-ft Reels, 413 U.S. 123 (1973), the Court held that the "right to possess obscene material in the privacy of one's home does not give rise to a correlative right to have someone sell or give it to others." 413 U.S. at 128. In so holding, the Court ruled that Stanley is to be viewed as "explicitly narrow and precisely delineated." 413 U.S. at 127. "We are not disposed to extend the precise, carefully limited holding of Stanley. . . ." 413 U.S. at 128. Indeed, the Court has squarely held that there is no right to "receive it" in "the privacy of the home." United States v. Orito, 413 U.S. 139, 141 (1973). In Orito, the Court further held that there is no right to use "common carriers in interstate commerce" (such as the telephone company) for delivery of obscene material to the home. 413 U.S. at 142. See also, United States v. Reidel, 402 U.S. 351, 353-54 (1971) (there is no right to deliver obscene material for use in the home.)

Furthermore, the Supreme Court in FCC v. Pacifica Foundation, 438 U.S. 726 (1978), held, inter alia, that radio and television do not have the right to "broadcast" "indecent" material into the home. The Court rejected the contention that an individual has a right to access in the privacy of his home to "indecent" radio or television broadcasts. The Court reasoned that such broadcasts are "uniquely accessible to children" and "that the government's interest in the 'well-being of its youth' justified the regulation of otherwise protected speech." 438 U.S. at 749. This government interest in the "well-being of its youth" and the "accessibil[ity] to children" are similarly present, and are triggered, upon the transmission of "indecent" or "obscene" dial-a-porn into the home. As the Court stated: "[T]he ease with which children may obtain access . . ., coupled with the concerns [for children] recognized in Ginsberg, amply justify special treatment of "indecent" material. 438 U.S. at 250.

Assuming arguendo that exposure of dial-a-porn to children can be prevented, the Supreme Court has rejected the contention that the distribution or transmission of obscene materials between consenting adults is constitutionally sanctioned. In Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49 (1973), the Court held that notwithstanding lack of exposure to children, the distribution of obscene material between consenting adults could be regulated:

"We categorically disapprove the theory . . . that obscene, pornographic films acquire constitutional immunity from state regulation simply because they are exhibited for consenting adults only. . . . [W]e hold that there are legitimate state interests at stake in stemming the tide of commercialized obscenity, even assuming it is feasible to enforce effective safeguards against exposure to juveniles and to passersby. Rights and interests other than those of the advocates are involved." 413 U.S. at 57.

This holding squarely does away with any contention that "consenting adults" have a right to transmit or receive obscene dial-a-porn. It should again be stressed, however, that many dial-a-porn distributors have openly made their "product" available to children and have refused to acknowledge any responsibility for excluding children's access.

The products of the dial-a-porn industry are clearly not protected by a constitutional right of privacy. These messages are being publicly distributed and have become openly available to children through channels of public commerce. Because of the complete public and commercial nature of this dial-a-porn industry, regulation under Section 223 is clearly permissible.

III. THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT MAY LAWFULLY PROHIBIT THE TRANSMISSION OF OBSCENE AND INDECENT DIAL-A-PORN

A. Obscene dial-a-porn

Without question, obscene speech is not protected by the First Amendment. Brockett v. Spokane Arcades, Inc., 472 U.S. , 86 L.Ed.2d 394, 105 S.Ct. (1985); Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973). Hence, the government may lawfuly prohibit its distribution, whether telephonically or through other media. Kaplan v. California, 413 U.S. 115 (1973). See also, United States v. Lampley, 573 F.2d 783, 50 A.L.R. Fed. 525 (3rd Cir. 1978) (upholding constitutionality of 47 U.S.C. § 223). This issue is so well settled that there has been no serious claim to date that the Congress may not constitutionally prohibit "obscene" dial-a-porn.

B. Indecent dial-a-porn

The more frequently repeated assertion is that Congress may not legislate against "indecent" dial-a-porn. This assertion is erroneous and ignores sound legal precedents permitting the use of the "indecency" standard for the telephone medium. These precedents and authority are set forth herein.

In its landmark case of F.C.C. v. Pacifica Foundation, 438 U.S. 726 (1978), the Supreme Court defined the word "indecent" as "nonconformance with accepted standards of morality." It is a "shorthand term for patent offensiveness." Id., at 470 n. 15. This definition obviously does not coincide with the three-part definition of "obscenity" found in Miller v. California. Yet, the Supreme Court has never limited government restrictions on speech to the obscenity standard.[2] For example, the Court has upheld restrictions on all of the following types of speech: false advertising, speaking a prayer in a public school, libel, slander, speaking words which amount to a conspiracy or an obstruction of justice, sedition, yelling fire in a crowded theatre, using words which constitute offering a bribe, words that threaten social harm because they advocate illegal acts, words (from a loudspeaker) at 3:00 a.m. in a residential neighborhood, speaking in contempt of court, committing perjury under oath, saying words which have been classified (e.g., secret) by the government, copyright violations, pretrial publicity which might interfere with a defendant's opportunity to secure a fair trial, U.S. government employees engaging in political speech (Hatch Act), sexually explicit material which is harmful to minors, non-obscene sexually explicit movies shown in violation of a zoning ordinance, child pornography, and finally, "indecent" speech.[3] Thus, the broad contention that government restrictions on expression are limited to the obscenity standard are quite incorrect. Regulation of sexually-oriented expression has by no means been limited to that standard, although the degree of permissible regulation has varied with the circumstances.

The application of the "indecency" standard to dial-a-porn is supported by the Supreme Court's analysis of the First Amendment, which accords some varieties of speech (e.g., "indecent" speech) less protection than others.[4] The Supreme Court's rulings that certain types of expression are entitled to little or no protection under the First Amendment find their modern beginnings with Chaplinski v. New Hampshire, 315 U.S. 568 (1942), where the Court upheld a "fighting words" statute under which Chaplinski had been convicted for a calling a policeman "a God damned racketeer" and a damned fascist." Id. at 569. Justice Murphy's rationale for upholding the statute against a First Amendment attack is set forth in the following excerpt from the opinion:

[1] Federal criminal charges were dismissed in 1985 in Utah, where numerous children had been exposed to the dial-a-porn services. Because § 223(b) is in a state of confusion, the U.S. Attorney attempted to prosecute Carlin Communications and others for violations of other federal obscenity laws. However, the Judge dismissed the indictments, ruling that violations could only be prosecuted under § 223(b). U.S. v. Carlin Communications, Inc. et al. No. CR-85-00086G (D. Utah 1985).

[2] In its unamended pre-1983 form, § 223 prohibited the use of the telephone to make "any comment, request, suggestion or proposal which is obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, or indecent . . ." 47 U.S.C. § 223(a)(1)(A). This precise language was upheld as constitutional in United States v. Lampley, 573 F.2d 783, (3rd Cir. 1978). Hence, the prohibition on "indecent" telephone language in § 223 has already passed constitutional muster.

Rev. 81 (1978); Note, "Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc.: Creating Levels of Protected Speech," 4 Hastings Const. L. Quarterly

"There are certain well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which have never been thought to raise any Constitutional problem. These include the lewd and obscene, the profane, the libelous, and the insulting or "fighting" words—those which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace. It has been well observed that such utterances are no essential part of any exposition of ideas, and are of such slight social value as a step to truth that any benefit that may be derived from them is clearly outweighed by the social interest in order and morality."

Id. at 571-72. The Supreme Court has embraced the position that differing degrees of protection and afforded different classes of speech. Speech protected in some contexts may in others be so harmful, or of so little value, that it can be regulated because the harm to society outweighs the expressive interests. Thus, First Amendment protection "often depends on the content of the speech." Young v. American Mini Theatres, Inc., 427 U.S. 50, 66 (1976). Furthermore, as Justice Stevens has stated, "the First Amendment affords some forms of speech more protection from governmental regulation than other forms of speech," New York v. Ferber, 102 S.Ct. 3348, 3367 (1982) (Stevens, J. concurring), and the context of speech may determine whether or not it is protected. F.C.C. v. Pacifica Foundation, supra, at 747-48 (1978). The Court has allowed government regulation of non-obscene speech, based upon subject matter and context, in numerous cases. See, Rowan v. Post Office Department, 397 U.S. 728 (1970) (banning erotic material from the mails at recipient request); C.B.S. v. Democratic National Committee, 412 U.S. 94 (1973) (upholding network refusal to accept commercial advertising); Lehman v. Shaker Heights, 418 U.S. 298 (1974) (upholding policy of accepting commercial advertising but refusing political advertisements on city-owned bus line); Greer v. Spock, 424 U.S. 828 (1976) (barring political speakers from a military base); Jones v. North Carolina Prisoners Union, 433 U.S. 119 (1977) (banning in-prison solicitation of membership in a prisoners union); Young v. American Mini Theatres, supra, and Renton v. Playtime Theatres, Inc., U.S. , 89 L.Ed.2d 29, 106 S.Ct. (1986) (placing zoning restrictions on the location of adult theatres); F.C.C. v. Pacifica, supra, (prohibiting radio broadcast of indecent programming); Board of Education v. Pico, 457 U.S. 853 (1982) (certain books may be removed from a high school library because of their vulgarity); New York v. Ferber, supra, (banning non-obscene sexually explicit depictions of minors); Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629 (1968) (banning distribution to minors of non-obscene materials which is "harmful to minors"); Bethel School District No. 403 v. Fraser, 478 U.S. , 92 L.Ed.2d 549, 106 S.Ct. (1986) (upheld restriction on indecent sexually suggestive language in a political speech by high school student); City of Newport v. Iacobucci, 479 U.S. , 93 L.Ed.2d 334, 107 S.Ct. (1986) (upheld city ordinance banning non-obscene nude or nearly nude dancing in bars).

It is important to recognize that laws restricting "indecent" or "obscene" speech are not directed at a particular viewpoint. They proscribe only the mode or form of expression, not any ideas the "indecent" language or pictures may purport to convey. If the speaker is concerned with ideas, he can escape the penalty by expressing them in some other form. The Court has recognized that content is separable from form and that other modes of expression are virtually always available. Restrictions on "indecent" or "obscene" speech do not preclude advocacy of any ideas such speech might otherwise convey. For example, prohibitions on "indecent" telephone recordings may be compared with a lawyer who, in open court, addresses the judge in "indecent" terms. Rules against that sort of speech will undoubtedly be enforced by the judge (holding lawyer in contempt). The Court recognizes that other more acceptable means of objecting to the judge are available and the lawyer must use them. As the Court stated in Pacifica:

"A requirement that indecent language he avoided will have its primary effect on the form, rather than the content, of serious communications. There are few, if any, thoughts that cannot be expressed by the use of less offensive language. . . . At most . . . [i]t will deter only . . . patently offensive references to excretory and sexual organs and activities. . . . [T]hey surely lie at the periphery of First Amendment concerns."

Since March of 1983, when dial-a-porn was first commercially marketed, countless children have been exposed to it. It constitutes an attractive nuisance in every home in America where children are present. There is no completely effective way to prevent children from being exposed to "indecent" or "obscene" dial-a-porn so long as it is lawfully and commercially marketed. Make no mistake, dial-a-porn providers care little whether a caller is a child of 9 or an adult of 19—their motive is profit. Children are being injured every day through "indecent" dial-a-porn.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that where the interests of children are at stake the government is fully justified in regulating non-obscene material. This significant governmental interest in the protection of minors has been identified in a number of cases. See Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 168 (1944) ("[a] democratic society rests, for its continuance, upon the healthy, well-rounded growth of young people into full maturity as citizens"); New York v. Ferber, supra, 756-57 ("a state's interest in 'safeguarding the physical and psychological well-being of a minor' " is "compelling" and justifies banning non-obscene sexually explicit depictions of minors); F.C.C. v. Pacifica, supra, 749 (government interest in the "well-being of its youth" sufficient to ban all indecent broadcasting to children, as well as adults).

In Ginsberg v. New York, supra, the Supreme Court upheld a ban on the distribution of a non-obscene sexually explicit material to children. The prohibition on distribution of such "indecent" [5] material to children is supported by the exact same interest present when "indecent" dial-a-porn is exposed to children. The "government's interest in the 'well-being of its youth' and in supporting 'parents' claim to authority in their own household justified the regulation of otherwise protected expression." Pacifica, supra, at 749; Ginsberg, supra, at 639-40. The Court in Ginsberg elaborated on those compelling interests. There were two governmental interests which justified limitations on the availability of sexually explicit ("indecent") material to children. First, the Court noted that "constitutional interpretation has consistently recognized that the parents claim to authority in their household to direct the rearing of their children is basic in the structure of our society," and that parents and others responsible for children's well-being "are entitled to the support of laws designed to aid discharge of that responsibility." Id., at 639. Second, the Court stated that "government has an independent interest in the well-being of its youth." Id., at 640. The Court declared that:

"While the supervision of children's reading may best be left to their parents, the knowledge that parental control or guidance that parental control or guidance cannot always be provided and society's transcendent interest in protecting the welfare of children justify reasonable regulation of the sale of material to them. It is, therefore, altogether fitting and proper for a state to include in a statute designed to regulate the sale of pornography to children special standards, broader than those embodied in legislation aimed at controlling dissemination of such material to adults."

Id. Indeed, Justice Stewart, in his concurring opinion in Ginsberg, at 649-50, provided an additional theoretical justification for stricter regulation of dissemination of sexually explicit "indecent" material to minors:

"I think a State may possibly determine that, at least in some precisely delineated areas, a child—like someone in a captive audience—is not possessed of that full capacity for individual choice which is the presupposition of First Amendment guarantees."

As the Court more recently stated, the government's interest in "safeguarding the physical and psychological well-being of a minor" is "compelling." New York v. Ferber, supra, at 756-57 (emphasis supplied).

Today, children are suffering injury through exposure to sexually explicit "indecent" dial-a-porn. Thus, "society's right to 'adopt more stringent controls on communicative materials available to youths than on those [only] available to adults' " is well established. Pacifica, supra, at 757 (Powell, J. concurring) (quoting Erznoznik v. Jacksonville, 422 U.S. 205, 212 (1975)); See also, Miller v. California, supra, at 36 n.17; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. Dallas, 390 U.S. 676, 690 (1968); Jacobellis v. Ohio, 378 U.S. 184, 195 (1964). No member of the present Court has dissented from this principle. Indeed, in the recent case, Bethel School District No. 403 v. Fraser, 478 U.S. , 92, L.Ed.2d 549, 106 S.Ct. (1986), the Court made emphatic the government's ability to ban sexually indecent speech to children even in the context of a political speech. The Court emphasized that bans on indecent speech have been upheld repeatedly where the welfare of children was at issue. Citing Thomas Jefferson, the Court stated:

"The Manual of Parliamentary Practice, drafted by Thomas Jefferson and adopted by the House of Representatives to govern proceedings in that body, prohibits the use of 'impertinent' speech during debate and likewise provides that '[n]o person is to use indecent language against the proceedings of the House. Jefferson's Manual of Parliamentary Practice, §§ 359, 360, reprinted in Manual and Rules of the House of Representatives, HR Doc. 97.271, pp. 158-159 (1982)."

92 L.Ed.2d at 557 (emphasis added). The Court thus noted that Congress itself bans "indecent" speech during Congressional proceedings. It is interesting to note that dial-a-porn messages are so offensive and obscene that they cannot be quoted on the House floor or their transcripts placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The governmental right to restrict access to non-obscene but "indecent" material even to adults, when it is sufficiently harmful to children, is a key part of the Court's rationale in the landmark F.C.C. v. Pacifica Foundation case.[6] Radio and television broadcasting, like the telephone, is "uniquely accessible to children." Id., at 749.

The Court's willingness to deny access to non-obscene material to adults when children would otherwise be harmed was demonstrated in Board of Education v. Pico, 457 U.S. 853 (1982). In Pico, the Court remanded with instructions for the lower court to determine whether improper motivations had tainted the Board's removal of certain books from a high school library. The First Amendment would be offended if the court found the books had been removed with intent "to deny respondents access to ideas with which petitioners disagreed." Id., at 872. On the other hand, "an unconstitutional motivation would not be demonstrated if it were shown that petitioners had decided to remove the books at issue because those books were pervasively vulgar." Id., at 871 (emphasis supplied). Pico identifies another context in which government may restrict dissemination of indecent materials to children, as well as adults.

Probably the most frequently cited case in opposition to the use of an "indecency" standard is Butler v. Michigan, 352 U.S. 30 (1957), with its oft-quoted assertion that the government may not "reduce the adult population . . . to reading only what is fit for children." Id., at 383. In a brief opinion the Court struck down a criminal conviction under a manifestly overbroad Michigan statute that forbade the publication, sale or other distribution of any publication, writing, picture: "or other thing, including any recordings, containing obscene, immoral, lewd or lascivious prints, pictures, figures or descriptions, tending to incite minors to violent or depraved or immoral acts, manifestly tending to the corruption of the morals of youth . . ."

Id., at 381. The Court correctly ruled that the law was overbroad and "not reasonably restricted to the evil with which it is said to deal." Id., at 383. It is significant to note that Michigan had another statute specifically proscribing the distribution of erotic materials to minors, but that statute was not before the Court. Id.

The more recent Pacifica Court limited the Butler case by distinguishing it. In a real sense, of course, Pacifica bans the broadcast of "indecent" material to adults as well as children. However, the Court ruled that unlike Butler, the F.C.C. order did not "reduce adults to hearing only what is fit for children" because adults "may purchase tapes and records or go to theatres and nightclubs to hear these words." Pacifica, supra, at 750 n. 28; and See, Powell, J. (concurring) at 760 ("the Commission's holding does not prevent willing adults from purchasing Carlin's ["indecent"] records, from attending his performances, or, indeed, from reading the transcript reprinted as an appendix to the Courts opinion"). Clearly, this analysis is squarely applicable to "indecent" recordings heard over the telephone. They are easily available to adults from other sources and their removal from the telephone (where they are exposed to children) would not "reduce adults to hearing only what is fit for children." Indeed, the Court itself analogized "indecent" broadcasting with "indecent" telephone language, stating that neither is given "constitutional immunity" to "avoid a harm that has . . . taken place." Id., at 749. The Court cited as justification for its holding the need for newly enacted Congressional legislation against "obscene or profane" telephone language. Id., at n. 27.

One must remember that the Butler statute prohibited the distribution of all material "unsuitable" for minors no matter what the source or media. It made it impossible for adults to obtain the material anywhere. As in Pacifica, the dial-a-porn prohibition would deal only with one medium which is uniquely hurtful to children. As Justice Powell stated in his Pacifica concurrence:

"In most instances, the dissemination of this kind of degrading speech to children may be limited without also limiting willing adults access to it. Sellers of printed and recorded matter and exhibitors of motion pictures and live performances may be required to shut their doors to children, but such a requirement has no effect on adult access. . . . The difficulty is that such a physical separation of the audience cannot be accomplished in the broadcast [or telephone] media. . . . [B]oth adults and unsupervised children are likely to be in the broadcast or [dial-a-porn] audience, and the broadcaster [or provider] cannot reach willing adults without also reaching children."

Id., at 758-59 (Powell, J. concurring). Justice Powell went on to state that "[t]his, as the Court emphasizes, is one of the distinctions between" such media and others "justifying a different treatment . . . for First Amendment purposes." Id.

As in Pacifica, the prohibition of "indecent" dial-a-porn involves a limited form of regulation of a single medium whose adult and youth audiences cannot be physically separated. Butler, on the other hand, applied to all media and embraced a wide-ranging (and vaguely defined) subject matter. Moreover in Butler, dissemination of the materials to children could generally be controlled at the point of distribution without denying access to willing adults. This is impossible with broadcast radio (as in Pacifica) and dial-a-porn.

Indeed, the very facts present in Butler limit it to the situation wherein the distributor of "indecent" material can differentiate between adults and children. This obviously cannot be done when the child telephones a tape-recorded message. Clearly, the ruling that better applies to dial-a-porn is Pacifica. Telephones are precisely like radio and television because of their easy accessibility to children and the virtual impossibility for parents to monitor their use.[7]

The Court in Pacifica also reasoned that "broadcast media" has a pervasive presence in the lives of all Americans. "Patently offensive, indecent material presented over" such a pervasive media "confronts the citizens . . . in the privacy of the home, where the individuals right to be left alone plainly outweighs the First Amendment rights of an intruder." Id., at 748 (citing Rowan v. Post Office Dept., supra, banning erotic material from the mails at recipients request). This analysis is squarely applicable to dial-a-porn. It is of the utmost importance to be congizant that dial-a-porn is presently in the home whether the homeowner wants it or not. Today one cannot have telephone service in the privacy of one's family environment without being required to have dial-a-porn with it. Families with children must give up telephone service to be "left alone" from exposure of their children to this "intruder". Is there really a medium more "pervasive" than the telephone? We know that children (especially teens) spend countless hours on the telephone. At present, no family can be left alone in their own homes without the harmful nuisance of indecent or obscene dial-a-porn.[8]

Further, an argument can be made that because the telephone system is a regulated and protected system serving such a vital public function, it should be held to a higher standard of conduct than, say, a newspaper. In essence, the telephone system carries out the governmental function of providing telephone communication to all citizens who choose to have it at a rate set by governmental regulatory bodies. They are given de facto monopoly protection by the government and often use publicly owned property to carry out their business. In return for such privileged status, the telephone system has a public trust. The trust is breached when the telephone system enters the pornography business by exposing "indecent" dial-a-porn to virtually every child in America. Cf., United Church of Christ v. F.C.C., 359 F.2d 994, 1003 (D.C. Cir. 1966) (opinion authored by Chief Justice Burger, then a member of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals).

[6] The Court also rested its holding on the "pervasiveness" of the medium which carries the "indecent" material to children, discussed infra. 438 U.S. at 748.

[7] Also, one cannot discount the fact that Pacifica in 1978 is the most recent expression of the Supreme Court's will. No member of the 1957 Butler Court remains on the Supreme Court bench. Indeed, Justice Stewart, who dissented in Pacifica, is no longer a member of the Court.

[8] Recently the Supreme Court affirmed the case Jones v. Wilkinson, 800 F.2d (10th Cir. 1986), aff'd.— U.S.— (March 23, 1987). There the 10th Circuit held that the federal Cable Communications Policy Act of 1984, 47 U.S.C. § 521-559, had preempted the states from regulating "indecent" cable programming. 800 F.2d at 990-91. Contrary to many published media accounts of this case, the issue here was "preemption" by the federal government, not the constitutionality of the "indecency" standard. Still, it is pertinent to point out that a family can have non-cable broadcast television in their home if they choose. They cannot have a telephone in their home without dial-a-porn. Unlike television, the telephone choice is either no telephone or dial-a-porn. Indeed, since deregulation of cable, many companies are competing for the same customers. The telephone subscriber has only one choice—a local telephone company which imposes dial-a-porn on its subscribers.

IV. UNDER 47 U.S.C. § 223 (B)(4), THE ATTORNEY GENERAL MAY LAWFULLY ENJOIN TRANSMISSION OF DIAL-A-PORN WHICH VIOLATES § 223(B)(1)(a) OR (1)(b)

Without question, the government may lawfully restrain a party's violation of an obscenity statute through the use of a civil injunction proceeding, as permitted by 47 U.S.C. § 223(b)(4) (as redesignated by the Helms-Bliley Amendment). Such a procedure, whereby the government files a civil action petitioning the court to issue an injunction against the future distribution of specifically named or identified materials has been categorically approved by the Supreme Court. Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 50-55 (1973); Kingsley Books v. Brown, 354 U.S. 436, 441 (1956). The holdings of Paris Adult Theatre and Kingsley Books are clearly applicable to § 223 (b)(4) and permit the Attorney General to proceed against violations of this statute by injunction.

The Supreme Court has set forth the guidelines for such an injunction proceeding in several cases. Specifically, the Court has held such a proceeding is constitutionally permissible when, as here, the burden of proof and of initiating the judicial review is the government's, and the dial-a-porn provider is allowed to transmit pending a full adversary judicial proceeding, with a prompt final judicial review available. Paris Adult Theatre, 413 U.S. at 55; and see Blount v. Rizzi, 400 U.S. 410 (1971); Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51 (1965). Subsection 223(b) (4) is fully supported by authority of the Supreme Court.

V. CONCLUSION

It has been demonstrated that the open availability of dial-a-porn is a serious problem for adults, as well as children. It has further been demonstrated that attempts to regulate dial-a-porn have been a complete failure since the start of this "industry" in 1983. This present situation can only be corrected if the present legislation is enacted by Congress. This memorandum of law has clearly shown that § 223(b) as amended is firmly supported by legal precedent, and by a tradition for the protection of children from this type of harm. There is no legal or constitutional obstacle to the passage of this legislation by Congress.

Clearly, Congress has the authority to enact this legislation. It is sound policy—it is constitutional policy and I urge my colleagues to join in supporting its immediate enactment.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLILEY. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should direct this question to the Chair. I want to know whether or not under this procedure if that time is yielded back we will have any opportunity at all to discuss the features of H.R. 5 with respect to the educational aspects, or else will this end the debate today and pass it back to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Now is the time for the debate to occur with respect to the substance of the motion.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Then I would ask the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, if he would yield to me and other Members who want to discuss what we believe are the most important aspects of this conference report, and that is the basic educational programs which we have been waiting for over a year to have considered.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS].

If I control all the time, I will yield half of it to the other side.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that we might proceed to discuss the educational aspects of the matter without any reference to the Helms amendment which was just added, unless someone so desires.

I think that it will be most appropriate, however, for the Members to know what is in the education aspects of the agreement.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, in order to clarify the situation, for purposes of debate only, I yield all my time to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS].

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair state the situation.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] will be recognized for 30 minutes of debate on the motion to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, and the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor and the chairman of the House conferees, will be recognized for 30 minutes to discuss such matters as he may care to discuss or to yield such time as he may care to yield on the motion.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS].

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesies that have been extended to us. We know this has been a very complicated matter not involving the educational aspects but involving something which is important to us all, that is the unfortunate use of dial-a-porn.

Let us now turn back, however, to the issues which are so incredibly important to us today, and that is what is the status of those basic educational programs which do so much for the people of this country and especially those who live in the economically disadvantaged areas.

This is an incredibly important bill, and it is $7 billion. It has to do with our basic education in our Nation. First of all I want to commend the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, for the tremendous work that he and others have done, and commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] on our side as the ranking member on the subcommittee dealing with primary and secondary education. They have worked long and hard. There are new innovative provisions in here which my colleagues should listen to and understand because this does deal with the future of the country.

First of all I am pleased that we have recognized the ability of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], the chairman of the committee by naming the bill after him along with my good Senator from the State of Vermont, Senator STAFFORD, who is retiring. They have all worked extremely hard over the years and deserve those accolades.

At this particular point however, in view of the fact of the tremendous amount of work on this side that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] has put in, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, we have 25 million illiterates in the United States. We have another 50 million functional illiterates in the United States. That is about 75 million illiterates, and we spend most of our time talking about dial-a-porn when we should be talking about what in the world it is we are going to do if we are going to be competitive in this country, and that means we are going to do something about education. That is what this was supposed to be all about, and I am glad we are finally getting to it.

First of all, I want to pay tribute to one of the finest gentlemen I think that I have ever met in my time and that is the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor. Like my ranking member, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], I am happy that the bill is named the August F. Hawkins and Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary Education Improvement Act Amendments of 1988. I want to pay tribute to the staff who worked a long time working out the details with the Senate, and I am happy to tell my colleagues that we won in almost every area. We have the bill practically the way it was when we voted 401 to 1 when it left here. That was not easy to do for the staff, and of course, the heavy hitters like the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] came in and resolved the final issues that staff could not resolve or otherwise handle. But we are happy to present a bill here that began back on January 6, 1987. We are dealing with chapter 1, we are dealing with Even Start. I would like to talk about that program because I think in my years of experience in education if we are going to do anything about illiteracy we have to do it with the parents and the child both and we have to do it long before they get to first grade. In the program called Even Start we try to do that because we have the children and the illiterate or functionally illiterate parents working together trying to make the parents literate and at the same time trying to show the parents what we would just normally do in a home setting to help prepare youngsters for school.

When we look at our immigration situation we can see how important this bill is because now we are also beyond all the functional illiterates we have, we are adding more and more people into the country who not only have a language barrier but way beyond that they have had very little if any formal education and that will make it even more difficult.

We have made chapter 1 better. We have improved chapter 2. We have improved the adult education section. We have improved the Dwight David Eisenhower math and science program for teachers. We have a dropout prevention, and basic skills in secondary school program added to the bill. We have an auditing procedure that for the first time school districts will have a fighting chance. In the past the only person that had a fighting chance of course was the Department of Education. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD] and I had been battling this for a long, long time. We have to pay tribute to Jo-Marie St. Martin on the staff. She is the young lawyer who came up with all these fancy terms that made the Department of Education angry, but at the same time, it got what we wanted to get. So I think that we are presenting our colleagues with an ideal bill, a bill that should go unanimous this time, so I want to tell the gentleman from Illinois not to vote against the bill because he is opposed to the Department of Education. Let us make it a unanimous vote for an outstanding bill, one of the most important that we will ever pass and one that we must pass if we are going to be competitive and if as a matter of fact we are going to continue our lifestyle.

All of that goes by the board if we cannot do something about the functional illiteracy problem that we have that is growing and if we cannot do something about giving all people an equal opportunity to participate in a great society.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report we bring before you today is the most significant education bill to be considered by the Congress during this decade.

H.R. 5 is the bipartisan product of a team effort by the members of the Subcommittee on Elementary, Secondary, and Vocational Education. BILL GOODLING, the subcommittee's ranking minority member, has been an outstanding leader in bringing his expertise to bear on fashioning this bill. JIM JEFFORDS, BILL FORD, DALE KILDEE, PAT WILLIAMS, and all the other members of the subcommittee also contributed immensely in this huge undertaking.

H.R. 5 extends through 1993 almost all the major Federal elementary and secondary education programs, but the bill does much more than that. Enactment of this measure holds forth the promise that America can regain its competitive edge in the world economy.

H.R. 5 achieves this goal through two purposes. First, it contains provisions to help those who are furthest behind in school to achieve their fullest potential. Second, it seeks to hone the skills all students will need to be more productive workers, such as, math, science, and foreign languages.

A few weeks ago, the Carnegie Commission issued a report concluding that the poorest and most disadvantaged students have been left behind during this decade's push for school reform.

The reform movement, while most significant for those who have already been well prepared for school, has neglected, at peril to our economy, those furthest behind in school. Disadvantaged students now compromise one-fourth of the Nation's school population. And within 12 years, they will constitute a full one-third of all those in elementary and secondary schools. And further, as the Carnegie report indicates, education has worsened for urban and rural school districts alike.

The prime emphasis of Federal aid has been on helping those disadvantaged students, but unfortunately the aid has declined in effectiveness as the budget cutbacks have occurred during the 1980's. H.R. 5 places Federal aid back on the road toward expansion. In addition, it does far more than that; H.R. 5 demands greater accountability for the uses of these funds.

The key features which achieve these purposes are the following:

First, the chapter 1 program is amended to require schools to adopt plans to revise their programs whenever poor children are not adequately achieving. School districts and State departments of education will also become involved in order to provide the additional resources to raise the level of students' achievement.

Second, chapter 1 is also amended to urge additional funding of at least $500 million a year, above inflation, in order to serve all eligible children within 5 years.

Third, the program is also amended to target the bulk of this new funding on school districts with the largest concentrations of poor children.

Fourth, additional aid is also provided in chapter 1 to expand basic skills programs into the high schools and attempt to prevent high school dropouts.

Fifth, a new program is created to teach basic skills to illiterate parents of preschool-age poor children. These children, who must live in chapter 1 areas, would also receive preschool training at the same time as their parents are being assisted.

Sixth, the chapter 1 program is also amended to require much greater involvement of parents in the educational process.

Seventh, the chapter 2 program is amended to require States to spread the effective schools' techniques among local school districts. Research has shown that effective schools can be achieved through a structured approach to administration and learning.

Eighth, the Adult Education Act is amended to place the greatest emphasis on teaching literacy to those who are the most disadvantaged. New programs are also created to provide literacy training at the work site and to provide English literacy training for those who are deficient in speaking and writing English.

All these amendments are intended to help those who are behind educationally to achieve at their full abilities. America cannot tolerate a drag on its economy through having millions of citizens who cannot perform the simple tasks of reading and writing and understanding instructions at work.

H.R. 5 has as its second purpose honing the skills all workers will need in order to allow America to compete with Japan, South Korea, and the European nations. These countries have been cultivating skills in their schools which we have been neglecting far too long. As a result, they have greatly increased their workers productivity, while we are losing our competitive edge.

Several features of H.R. 5 which seek to address this are:

First, the science and math teacher retraining program is greatly expanded. Additional aid will be provided so that thousands more of our local science and math teachers will be able to upgrade their teaching skills. This upgrading will lead to improved math and science education in our elementary and secondary schools.

Second, a new foreign language program will focus on the most critically needed foreign languages and will provide funding for model programs to serve as examples for other schools districts.

Third, a new program is created for gifted and talented children. These children are the yeast which will help the rest of society rise to its full potential and we must direct additional resources to help them develop their skills.

Fourth, the star schools program is extended in order to permit greater use of telecommunications in our schools. Rural schools are particularly in need of electronic transmission into their classrooms of math, science and foreign language instruction.

H.R. 5 also makes other improvements in a variety of education programs. The impact aid program is amended to correlate the amount of payments to make up for loss of local taxes due to exempt Federal presence, more closely with the degree of need within school districts. The Women's Educational Equity Act is renewed to continue funding the development of curriculum materials leading to the eradication of sex-stereotyping and bias.

The conference report also upgrades the visibility of Federal statistics-gathering within the Department of Education. It is our intent to have a Commissioner of Education Statistics who will be Presidentially appointed and who will lead a professional, nonpolitical organization developing far more reliable and objective education statistics.

Related to this upgrading of statistics gathering, the conference report also expands the National Assessment of Educational Progress. NAEP provides the only national data on the performance of American school children which is reasonably reliable. The conference report expands NAEP to include several additional subject areas and also permits a very limited 2-year experiment in State-by-State comparision of educational achievement in reading and mathematics. This experiment is tightly restrained to have a full independent evaluation before any further attempts are made to expand it.

Although participation by States in this experiment is voluntary, I am concerned that such comparisons will tend to unfairly place urban and rural school districts in an unfavorable light. These districts are already struggling as a result of inadequate resources and inequality of educational opportunity. Currently, NAEP results are reported in terms of national data and serve to provide educational baselines or standards which can be useful in determining the performance of students in various subject areas. Therefore, the new experiment of State-by-State comparisons must be approached with caution. We all know that the use of standardized testing to measure educational achievement is fraught with shortcomings, and we must be extremely careful before the Congress endorses the idea of full 50-State comparisons of achievement.

This year is the 20th anniversary of title VII of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, which is our Nation's primary legislation for equal education opportunity for limited-English proficient children, youth, and adults. H.R. 5 greatly strengthens the program by increasing the funding flexibility for local programs without mandating any particular teaching methods. We believe academic achievement is as important as English language acquisition, and developmental programs are the most appropriate for reaching these twin goals. Parental involvement has been strengthened, and we have augmented the funds for State departments of education in order to improve these programs. Finally, we have assured that bilingual programs will be of the highest academic quality, since we have clarified the evaluation requirements at every level of accountability.

The last major improvement made by H.R. 5 would revise the audit process used by the Department of Education and the appeal process used in reviewing audit determinations. Our committee has been concerned about this area since the early 1980's and we have worked very closely with civil rights groups and education organizations in order to bring equity and fairness into the procedure.

The amendments we have adopted would revise that procedure by professionalizing the hearing process through the use of administrative law judges, by permitting the use of discovery, by permitting a setting of the penalty to be proportionate to the harm caused to a Federal interest, and by reducing the penalty due to mitigating circumstances. Our objective is to have a process which is perceived to be fair to all parties, so that when wrong is done it can be righted in a just manner.

Mr. Speaker, I honestly believe that we in the House, and our colleagues in the other body, under the leadership of Senators PELL and STAFFORD, have fashioned an excellent and strong education bill. The original Elementary and Secondary Education Act of over 20 years ago, gave us the foundation for ensuring a quality education for all students. H.R. 5 provides us with the bricks, and other building materials necessary to build a strong framework. Now, the promise of this conference report depends on only one further action by the Congress. Only through the mortar of sufficient appropriations can we complete the construction of our national education policy.

I look forward to working with Chairman NATCHER and the members of the Appropriations Committee, and in this regard, I hope that the appropriations bill we consider next month will provide us with the wherewithal to put American education back on the right track.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in all of the congratulations that have been made from both sides of the aisle, particularly in the comments of our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], who has led us to probably the finest example of a bipartisan product that I have seen produced in this House.

I rise in support of the House-Senate conference agreement on H.R. 5, the Augustus Hawkins-Robert Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Act of 1988.

The agreement reauthorizes through fiscal year 1993 virtually all major Federal programs that assist elementary and secondary education—including chapter 1 compensatory education, chapter 2 education block grants, bilingual education, adult education, Indian education, magnet schools, math-science programs, and several new education initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, it was 23 years ago, almost to the month and day, that I stood on this floor as a freshman Member of the House, and a freshman member of the Committee on Education and Labor, to vote for passage of H.R. 2362, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, providing Federal aid to those schools with high concentrations of both educationally and economically deprived or disadvantaged children. The vote was 263 to 153 in favor of this bill.

President Johnson signed the bill into law, Public Law 89-10, on April 11, 1965, which became the first "general school aid" in the Nation's history.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2362 was introduced and guided to enactment by President Johnson after dozens of bills had been introduced, and then abandoned, because of intense opposition and pressure from different groups. These bills, for the most part, attempted to provide across-the-board aid to schools, for construction, teacher training and salaries, for example, but the opposition claimed that the costs were too high.

Finally, when all else had failed, President Johnson appointed a task force, headed by John W. Gardner, who later became Johnson's Secretary for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, which proposed a bill offering "specialized aid for districts with concentrations of children from low-income families." By using this "aid to children" approach, for "specialized" rather than "across-the-board" aid, the bill avoided much of the cross-fire over aid to private schools that had helped kill school-aid bills in the past. Because, aside from the fact that this legislation represented the first-ever "general aid for schools" in the Nation's history, it also mandated that children in private or parochial schools, who were eligible under the criteria set forth in the bill, would receive "equitable" services to those received by children in public schools.

While the aid to private school children became a "church-state" issue that was certainly divisive during the 1965 floor debate on the bill, the most divisive issue by far was over the formula for distributing the title I funds.

Title I of the original Elementary and Secondary Education Act, now called chapter 1, provided grants to States based on the number of children between the ages of 5 and 17 years, who were from families with incomes at $2,000 a year or lower, times 50 percent of each State's average expenditure per school child. Claims were heard from various members of both parties, but most notably Mrs. Edith Green, Democrat from Oregon and member of the Education and Labor Committee, that rich States got richer while poor States remained poor, under the formula. Efforts to change the formula failed in both bodies on record votes.

In September 1965, the supplemental appropriations bill, H.R. 10586, contained an appropriation of $1.016 billion to fund the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

Mr. Speaker, while the delivery system has changed dramatically since 1965, I am pleased to note that we have tested ourselves 23 years later to see how strong our commitment as a nation is to providing services to all needy children, in both public and private schools, and find that we are as strongly committed now as we were then. To be sure there are new concerns we have addressed since 1965—such as illiteracy, math and science, foreign languages, computer instruction, magnet schools, migrant education, audit reform, and others—the original purpose of providing "general school aid" as envisioned by President Lyndon Johnson, is preserved and enhanced beyond our wildest dreams.

Mr. Speaker, the conference agreement on H.R. 5, the Hawkins-Stafford School Improvement Act of 1988 which is before us today, is legislation that cannot be characterized as just another omnibus education reauthorization bill, but a bill that is a historical account of the success of the American experiment. It contains our response to the duty that is upon all of us—to provide knowledge—a duty that has rested on each successive generation. As Johnson said 23 years ago, and it is true today, "that duty weighs most heavily upon us."

H.R. 5, as agreed to by House-Senate conferees, reauthorizes more than 14 education programs which are about to expire, and adds a variety of new "initiatives" such as Mr. Hawkins' Effective Schools Program, and Mr. Goodling's Even Start Program. This bill is being referred to today as the "Hawkins-Stafford Elementary and Secondary Education Act Amendments of 1988." Conferees on H.R. 5, in recognition and appreciation of the 26 years of devoted service by our Committee Chairman AUGUSTUS HAWKINS, during which time he has been one of our most stalwart advocates for education and training programs, have med these amendments for him and for our esteemed colleague in the U.S. Senate, ROBERT T. STAFFORD, who is retiring at the end of the 100th Congress. Senator STAFFORD's name appears in the title of the H.R. 5 amendments in tribute to his 17 years of distinguished service in the Senate and 11 years in the House. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the conferees have also named the Guaranteed Student Loan Program a permanent program, after Senator ROBERT T. STAFFORD.

Mr. Speaker, before continuing my statement in support of the education programs contained in H.R. 5, I would like to make a further statement concerning Senator STAFFORD's long service.

In 1965 Mr. STAFFORD was, like me, a Member of the House of Representatives. He supported passage of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act under a Democratic President who, it was claimed, had coerced Members of his party in both the House and Senate into "rubber-stamping" a White House bill. Senator STAFFORD, a Republican, not only voted for the 1965 ESEA bill sponsored by a controversial and strong Democratic President, he did so in the face of overwhelming opposition from members of his own party. On that day 23 years ago, Senator STAFFORD said:

> The needs of our children must be met. * * * I support the intent and purpose of this legislation. There is sufficient evidence that our States and local governments need assistance from the Federal government in order to meet those needs, and I am convinced as a lawyer and as a former attorney general of my state of Vermont, that sufficient safeguards are written into this legislation to keep controls of our education system at the State and local level and with public agencies. * * * For those who are unalterably opposed to any type of Federal aid to elementary and secondary schools, I cannot make any appeal.

The record will show, Mr. Speaker, that Senator ROBERT T. STAFFORD has continued, and particularly over the past 7½ years under a controversial and strong Republican President, whose policies have not always been in support of education programs begun in 1965, to be convinced that the educational needs of our children must be met. During our many budget and appropriations battles over the past several years, Senator STAFFORD, in direct and strong opposition to White House policy, has fought alongside his colleagues who supported continuation of the Federal role in education, no matter what their party affiliation—because he believed the "educational needs of our children must be met." We are deeply appreciative of his leadership during these most difficult years, not only as a U.S. Senator who could be counted on to vote for education, but also for his leadership, during 6 of the past 8 years, as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Education, Arts and Humanities.

Mr. Speaker, as Senator STAFFORD, put it 23 years ago, I am "ready to get on with the task we face in education by supporting this measure now at hand."

Mr. Speaker, I will not go into great detail on the content of H.R. 5, but I would like to describe some of the more important, and perhaps controversial issues that are addressed and that, for a while, divided the conferees before agreeing to a final bill.

CHAPTER 1

Always a highly targeted program, chapter 1 appears to be working still to achieve program objectives to enhance educational opportunities for children in low-income families, and to raise their academic achievement levels to national norms. H.R. 5 will continue those objectives. In addition, H.R. 5 provides for program improvements, a new section under chapter 1, which for awhile was at the center of a storm of protest among conferees and educators alike. But the final agreement on program improvements will not only assure that children enrolled in local chapter 1 programs will improve academically each year of enrollment, but provides as well for a collective effort among local and State education officials, parents, and teachers to improve local programs that have remained static or have declined in achievement levels over a period of 2 years or more. In addition, in recognition of the fact that H.R. 5 places even more responsibility on both State and local school officials to provide equal and effective educational opportunities for disadvantaged children, the conferees have agreed to allow modest incremental increases in State administrative expense accounts [SAE], provided, however, that such funds are strictly used for technical assistance, by and for the local school program authorities offering chapter 1 services. These modest increases for technical assistance are authorized to be 0.25 of 1 percent per year for the first 3 years, rising to 0.50 of 1 percent for the second 3-year period.

The second major change to chapter 1 is the provision of a "concentration" grant formula intended to serve areas with high concentrations of low-income families, thereby enabling high numbers or percentages of educationally disadvantaged children to be served. We still, as we did in 1965, Mr. Speaker, find a strong correlation between low income and low achievement among children in the Nation's schools, particularly those in highly concentrated areas of low-income families.

While the concentration grant formula does not do all things for all people, and while the eight largest States including Michigan do not exactly gain a lot under the concentration grant formula as adopted by the conferees, we have all had to accept that concentration means concentration—and that you cannot send additional funds to needy areas with high concentrations of eligible chapter 1 children while, at the same time, demanding that your State or district, which may not have those concentrations of eligible children, still receive vast increases in chapter 1 funds. We can't have it both ways. We are pleased to have been able to be realistic, if not outright noble, in putting forth the House formula and having it adopted, because it truly does, to the greatest extent possible, serve those areas and those States, particularly the Southern States where educationally deprived children have long been concentrated, and where they have for too long been underserved. I will admit—do admit freely—that it would have been much nicer if I had been able to travel back to my district, indeed to my State of Michigan, and claim that of the $400 million authorized the first year for concentration grants under chapter 1, vast amounts were going to show up in every school district, or every county, in my State. That is not the case. Four counties in Michigan show a gain under the concentration formula—Genesee, Kent, Oakland, and Wayne Counties. Of the four, Wayne County gains the most—between $14 and $16 million, most of which will go to Detroit public schools where the highest concentrations of eligible, poor, and needy children live and go to school.

H.R. 5 extends and revises chapter 2, the education block grant to the States. It has been streamlined and, while it still serves all school-age children, it does so through several new initiatives and incentives. The new Effective Schools Program is to be funded by requiring the use of 20 percent of State set-asides of chapter 2 block grant funds. It should work very well in the State of Michigan, which pioneered research and demonstrated Effective School Programs beginning more than a decade ago. The bill also provides a waiver of this requirement for States which can show an expenditure of State funds of at least 40 percent more than required in the act for Effective Schools Programs.

Aside from the reauthorization of chapters 1 and 2 in H.R. 5, the conference agreement also revises and extends:

The Education for Economic Security Act, math and science, and the Adult Education Act, which extends the traditional adult education programs while also addressing the adult illiteracy problem, targeting funds so that all adults are able to acquire "basic literacy skills."

H.R. 5 continues the historic requirement that private school children residing in eligible school districts receive chapter 1 services on an equitable basis with children in public elementary and secondary schools.

It took nearly 20 years for the Supreme Court to rule on the question raised back in 1965—and the Supreme Court ruled that indeed it is unconstitutional for public school teachers to go to private/parochial schools, particularly the church-owned schools, to teach remedial classes to eligible children, Aguilar versus Felton, 1984.

Our response in H.R. 5 to the Court decision is to provide for an authorization of funds to cover the costs of "capital expenses" incurred by local school officials in attempting to continue to provide equitable services to these children as required by statute, while at the same time being in compliance with the Court's ruling.

Mr. Speaker, other programs being revised and extended under H.R. 5 include Bilingual Education, Magnet Schools, Drug Free Schools and Communities Act, Indian Education, Impact Aid, new Dropout Prevention/Basic Skills for Secondary School Students Programs, new Gifted and Talented Programs, Women's Educational Equity, Ellender Fellowships, and others.

I would like to specifically, but briefly, address several programs being reauthorized and expanded under H.R. 5, such as: the Migrant Education Program, the Education Audit Reform Act, and the Child Care Development Centers Act.

AUDIT REFORM

The audit reform amendments have evolved over a period of 4 years. There has been extensive consultation between representatives of State and local education agencies, civil rights and child advocacy groups, and the Department of Education. The amendments strike a balance. Four important features of these audit reform amendments are: First, replacing the present Education Appeals Board [EAB] with administrative law judges [ALJ's]. These ALJ's must have legal training, experience with education programs, and be full time, which was not true in any case with members of EAB panels. Second, provision for an orderly and limited process of discovery available to the State and local education agencies. Third, requirement that the Secretary establish a prima facie case for recovery of funds in the preliminary departmental audit decision—no current requirement exists. Fourth, provision that the amount of funds recovered will be proportional to the amount of harm that has been done to the achievement of the purpose of the Federal education programs. In other words, if a State or local agency receives a $5 million grant and misuses $100,000, then the maximum audit liability of the educational agency will be $100,000, not $5 million as in current practice.

MIGRANT EDUCATION

The Migrant Education Program was first enacted in 1966 in recognition that the Federal Government had a compelling responsibility to address the severe educational programs which are unique to children of migrant workers in this country. These children are at risk because they are normally older than their peers, they exhibit a high degree of language difficulties, they come from families where combined annual income is less than $10,000, and where, as a rule, neither parent has graduated from high school, and they have a pattern of high mobility with frequent interruptions in their schooling.

H.R. 5 continues the Migrant Education Program in its present form, but with several improvements which include: A call for full funding; expansion of the age range of children to be served from those 5 to 17 years of age to ages 3 to 21 years; encouraging parents to become and remain involved in their children's education including participation on parent advisory councils for this purpose; the development of a national certificate of eligibility to assist with the administration of the program, and to provide for the development of a program of accrual and credit exchange to facilitate graduation from high school.

NATIONAL COMMISSION ON MIGRANT EDUCATION

Mr. Speaker, I am extremely pleased to note the adoption by the conferees of the House bill's establishment of a National Commission on Migrant Education. I would like to thank my colleagues on the conference committee for agreeing to authorize this 3-year Commission whose mission will be to create a blueprint of changes needed to meet the needs of migrant children over the remainder of this century.

Since the National Migrant Education Program began in the mid-1960's, hundreds of thousands of young people have had the opportunity to acquire an elementary and secondary education that previously had been impossible to obtain. At one time the children of migrant families were a forgotten population who moved in and out of classrooms, barely noticed, rarely completing a coherent year of studies, and finally dropping out of school. As recent as 1974, studies documented a 90-percent high school dropout rate among this mobile population. While the children of migrant families are still at greatest risk of dropping out of school, they have made great educational strides due in large part to the federally funded Migrant Education Program, the High School Equivalency Program, and the College Assistance Migrant Program.

The National Commission on Migrant Education will attempt to anticipate the future pattern of migrancy and recommend the appropriate educational services. It will take into consideration the changes in agricultural economics due to worldwide competition, the new immigration laws which will affect the makeup of the agricultural labor force and the shift in the skill levels required by employers. As one of its first mandates, the Commission will make an indepth study of the migrant student record transfer system, documenting its strengths and weaknesses. This unique system, also sensitive to patterns of migrancy as well as today's rapid technological advancements, transmits essential health and educational data about each child as he moves from school to school. The Commission will, in short, help describe where we are today in educating the children of migratory workers and what needs to be done for those children of tomorrow.

CHILD CARE DEVELOPMENT CENTERS ACT

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the House-Senate conferees on H.R. 5 agreed to adopt a Senate-passed provision known as the Comprehensive Child Development Program.

Authorized as part of the Head Start Act, it authorizes funds for making Federal grants to organizations to establish Comprehensive Child Development Centers.

It is the first early, continuous, and comprehensive program that will deliver the necessary support services to extremely young, poor children and their families that will, in turn, enable the children to enter school prepared to succeed.

The CCDCA does not duplicate existing services. Rather, it fills out what is missing—and services offered will range from prenatal and neonatal care, to health screening and referrals, shots, immunizations, well-baby care, child care, Head Start, nutrition, and parent education in parenting, infant and child development, health and nutrition, and so forth. It is not a day care bill. The goal is not to provide a place for parents to leave their child while they work. The purpose of CCDCA is to provide a place where extremely poor children and their families can go to receive support services that will help the children develop physically, socially, emotionally, and intellectually from birth to kindergarten.

Mr. Speaker, the CCDCA is a pilot program, authorizing no more than 10 to 25 projects—and its a very good way to demonstrate the efficacy of a program before huge amounts of dollars are spent on it.

I strongly favored making the CCDCA Program a part of H.R. 5, and am happy that it has been adopted by conferees. Its companion programs, like Head Start, WIC, and Immunizations, have already been proven as to their beneficial effects on both children and their families. This program has the same potential for success.

Mr. Speaker, we have made a great and I believe, successful, effort to improve the quality of education, as well as to call for full accountability on the part of schools and their officials with respect to student outcomes, within the framework of the old and the new programs we reauthorize in H.R. 5. I believe we have done this without imposing excessive administrative burdens on our State and local education officials, and without hampering their ability to be flexible and creative in the use of Federal education funds.

I congratulate, again, my committee chairman, Mr. HAWKINS, and the committee's ranking minority members, Messrs. GOODLING and JEFFORDS, for their foresight, energy, and commitment to excellence in guiding this important education bill to enactment.

Mr. Speaker, while I have briefly outlined the major provisions contained in H.R. 5, I would like to provide a full and accurate summary of the bill, including authorized funding levels. I recently read an unusually well-prepared summary of H.R. 5 in the April 9, 1988, edition of the Congressional Quarterly. I ask unanimous consent that excerpts from that article, which are attached, be inserted at the end of my statement.

H.R. 5, carefully crafted over a period of more than 2 years, will have an immediate and immensely beneficial effect on education throughout the rest of this decade, and far into the next. I commend it to my colleagues, and recommend that it do pass.

COMPENSATORY EDUCATION (CHAPTER 1)

Purpose.—Reauthorize through fiscal 1993 the federal program to help educationally deprived children, now authorized by the education provisions of the 1981 deficit-reduction law (PL 97-35). HR 5 would repeal Chapter 1 of the 1981 law and amend Title 1 of the 1965 Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

Basic Grants.—Distribute Chapter 1 "basic grants" to state educational agencies (SEAs)—to be allocated to local educational agencies (LEAs)—based on the number of children, aged 5-17, that come from families below the poverty level (according to the most recent census data). Children from families whose income is pushed above the poverty line by Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) benefits would also be eligible. At least 10 children within the school district must be eligible for the district to receive basic grant money.

Concentration Grants.—Reserve appropriations between $3.9 billion and $4.3 billion for school districts with an exceptionally high number of poor children—exceeding 6,500 or 15 percent of enrollment. If basic-grant appropriations exceed $4.3 billion, 10 percent of the total appropriation is reserved for concentration grants, provided no state receives less basic-grant money than it did in the preceding fiscal year. At least 2 percent of concentration grants are reserved for school districts that meet the requirements but are in counties that do not.

Guarantee each state a minimum of 0.25 percent of concentration-grant money. If concentration grants are not funded, each state would be guaranteed a minimum of 0.25 percent of basic-grant money as long as new appropriations exceed $700 million. No state could receive less than it received in fiscal 1988.

Use of Funds.—Require LEAs to use Chapter 1 funds for schools with a high number or percentage of low-income children. If there is not enough money to meet demonstrated need, an agency must rank its school according to the number of low-income children enrolled and allocate money to the schools with greatest need first. LEAs also must conduct an annual needs assessment, identifying educationally deprived children and the instructional areas on which a Chapter 1 program should focus, with the intent that those with the greatest need will receive additional help.

Maintain current restrictions on the use of Chapter 1 funds for preschool through secondary-school programs (to buy books or train teachers, for example). A local education agency, with state approval, can use up to 5 percent of its grant for certain innovative educational projects.

Allow any Chapter 1 school with 75 percent or more low-income children to use its grant, under the supervision of the local and state educational agencies, to upgrade the school's entire educational program.

Parental Involvement.—Encourage parents to get involved in their children's education by requiring local agencies to include parents in the planning and implementation of Chapter 1 programs. The bill requires that information and activities for parents be provided in a language and form that parents will be able to understand without difficulty.

Private Schools.—Authorize $30 million in fiscal 1988, $40 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter, to provide Chapter 1 services to educationally deprived children enrolled in private and parochial schools. The money is designated for capital expenses such as the purchase or lease of mobile units and computer equipment; insurance and maintenance costs; and transportation.

Achievement Standards.—Require Chapter 1 schools to improve their programs with the help of the LEA if, after a year, low-income children are not meeting certain achievement standards. After two years, if there is no significant improvement, the state educational agency must work with the local agency to improve the school's program. The bill authorizes a percentage of state and local funding—0.25 percent in fiscal years 1988-91 and 0.5 percent in fiscal years 1992-93—to carry out improvement programs.

"Even Start."—Create an "Even Start" program to extend Chapter 1 services to young children (aged 1-7) and their parents. The bill authorizes $35 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as needed thereafter, with a state minimum of $250,000 or 0.5 percent of appropriations, whichever is greater. The federal government's share would be no more than 90 percent of the program's cost in the first year, 80 percent in the second, 70 percent in the third and 60 percent in the fourth and succeeding years. Three percent of the appropriation would be reserved for eligible migrant children. The secretary of education must submit a program evaluation to Congress in 1993.

Secondary Schools.—Authorize $400 million in fiscal 1990, $450 million in 1991, $500 million in 1992 and $550 million in 1993 for dropout prevention and basic-skills improvement of educationally deprived secondary-school students. A state agency can reserve no more than 5 percent of its grant for administrative costs; the rest must be allocated to LEAs with the greatest number of poor children and dropouts. No state shall receive less than $250,000. The program continues a demonstration-grant program for dropout prevention and basic-skills improvement, but shifts control of the program from the education secretary to the states.

Migrant, Handicapped, Neglected Children.—Provide authority for distributing funds to state educational agencies for programs for children of migrant workers (aged 3-21), including seasonal agricultural and dairy workers and fishermen, handicapped children (from birth to age 21) and for neglected and delinquent children. The General Accounting Office must submit to Congress by Feb. 28, 1989, a study of Chapter 1 programs for the handicapped.

Require, in years when Chapter 1 appropriations are insufficient to cover all programs, that state-administered programs for migrant children, the handicapped, and neglected and delinquent children receive full payment before funds go to LEAs for other Chapter 1 programs.

Establish a National Commission on Migrant Education to study the educational needs of migrant children and authorize $2 million for the commission's operation. The commission would be terminated after three years.

Grants for Territories.—Reserve 1 percent of Chapter 1 appropriations for grants to Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Technical Assistance, Research.—authorize $10 million for fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter for evaluation, technical assistance and research, including: a study to assess the effectiveness of Chapter 1 programs (an interim report must be sent to Congress by Jan. 1, 1993, and the final report by Jan. 1, 1997); the preparation and distribution to state and local agencies and other interested parties of a policy manual explaining Chapter 1 programs; and grants to pay all or part of the cost of operating nine rural-assistance programs.

Require the secretary of education to develop national standards for local evaluation of Chapter 1 programs. LEAs must evaluate the effectiveness of their Chapter 1 programs at least once every three years and state agencies, every two years. The state agency's report must be submitted to the secretary of education, who is required to report to Congress biennially on state and local results.

Retain the program of block grants for state and local education agencies established in 1981 and authorize $580 million in fiscal 1989; $610 million in 1990; $640 million in 1991; $672 million in 1992; and $706 million in 1993. The bill would maintain the current grant split of 20 percent for state agencies and 80 percent for local agencies. State agencies must submit an annual report to the secretary of education on the use of Chapter 2 grants, the types of services provided and the students served.

Limit the use of Chapter 2 funds to six areas: (1) programs for at-risk students, including those most likely to drop out; (2) purchase of educational materials such as library books and computer software; (3) innovative programs for schoolwide improvement, including the effective-schools program; (4) teacher and personnel training; (5) programs for personal excellence, such as classes in ethics, performing and creative arts, physical fitness and health; (6) innovative programs, including those for gifted and talented students, early-childhood development and suicide prevention.

Effective Schools.—Authorize a state agency to reserve 20 percent of the money it receives under Chapter 2 for the effective-schools program to promote school-level planning and improvement and to increase the academic achievement of all children in the school.

National Programs.—Reauthorize such national programs as the National Diffusion Network, the Inexpensive Book Distribution Program (Reading is Fundamental), Arts in Education and Law-Related Education, and require that they be funded at least at fiscal 1987 levels, plus 5 percent. The bill also creates a new program, called "Blue Ribbon Schools," to recognize excellent elementary and secondary schools or programs, and authorizes not more than $1.5 million for the program.

MATH AND SCIENCE

Teacher Training.—Authorize $250 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter for grants to state and local educational agencies to strengthen the skills of teachers in the instruction of math and science. Four percent of those funds would be reserved for the education secretary's discretionary grants; 0.5 percent for schools for Indian children; and not more than 0.5 percent for U.S. territories. The remainder is to be distributed to states, half on the basis of children enrolled and half based on Chapter 1 poverty formulas. Five percent of the state grant can be used by the SEA for administrative purposes; another 5 percent can be used by the state agency for higher education for the same purpose. Of the remainder, 75 percent of the grants are to go to elementary- and secondary-school activities, such as the purchase of computer equipment for schools with 50 percent low-income children, and 25 percent to higher education activities, such as establishing training programs for new teachers who will specialize in math and science.

Teacher Recognition.—Authorize the president to recognize math, science and foreign-language teachers who have demonstrated outstanding teaching qualifications in their fields.

Extend the Partnership in Education for Mathematics, Science and Engineering through 1993, authorizing $10 million in fiscal 1988 and such sums as necessary thereafter.

"Star Schools"—Create a "Star Schools" program of grants to state and local educational agencies, higher education institutions and school consortia to introduce satellite technology into the classroom. Funding is authorized at a total of $100 million over five years, not to exceed $20 million a year. No grant can exceed $10 million in a year, and no recipient can receive more than $20 million over the life of the program. Grants will be awarded for equipment purchases and instructional programming.

MAGNET SCHOOLS

Increase the authorization for the magnet school program to $165 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter for grants to schools that specialize in such academic areas as music, math and science, or foreign languages as part of a desegregation plan to attract students of diverse racial, ethnic and social backgrounds. The education secretary must give special consideration to eligible LEAs that have applied for but not received a magnet school grant when awarding funds beyond the fiscal 1988 appropriation of $75 million.

DRUG EDUCATION

Reauthorize the 1986 Drug Free Schools and Communities Act through 1993 at a funding level of $250 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter.

Allow 50 percent of the funds to be used for grants to local governments and other public or private non-profit organizations for drug and alcohol education, prevention and early intervention programs; training programs for teachers, parents and local public service personnel; and a youth suicide prevention program. The remaining 50 percent will be targeted to community-based programs for high-risk youths such as dropouts and children of drug and alcohol abusers.

Require the secretary of education along with the secretary of health and human services to coordinate a national program of drug education that includes using athletes and entertainers as drug-free role models and providing technical assistance to state and local organizations.

Maintain five regional centers specializing in drug education.

SPECIAL PROGRAMS

Gifted and Talented.—Authorize $20 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter for a new program of grants to state and local educational agencies, institutes of higher education and other private and public organizations for programs to meet the needs of gifted and talented children.

Allow grants to be used for training teachers, creating models programs, providing technical assistance and carrying out national research, evaluation and data collection.

Establish a National Center for Research and Development in the Education of Gifted and Talented Children and Youth. Funding for the center and other national activities cannot total more than 30 percent of the amount appropriated for the entire program.

Women's Educational Equity.—Authorize $9 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter for grants to public agencies and private non-profit organizations for programs to provide educational equity for women. The funds are earmarked for demonstration projects, such as developing gender-neutral tests, and for costs related to carrying out current law that prohibits discrimination against women. In addition, "challenge grants," not to exceed $40,000 each, would be available for innovative programs to achieve women's educational equity. The bill would abolish the National Advisory Council on Women's Educational Programs.

Ellender Fellowships.—Authorize $3 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter for the Ellender Fellowship Program, which provides grants to the Washington, D.C.-based Close-Up foundation, a non-profit organization that promotes a greater understanding of federal government processes among secondary-school students and their teachers. Funds can be used only to help economically disadvantaged students and their teachers participating in the program, with special consideration given to handicapped students, migrant children, children of recent immigrants, and gifted and talented children.

Dropout Prevention, Basic-Skills Improvement.—Authorize $200 million in fiscal 1989 for basic-skills improvement programs for secondary-school students. Authorize $50 million for demonstration projects on ways to prevent students from dropping out of school and to encourage those who have dropped out to return and finish school. LEAs with 100,000 or more enrolled elementary- and secondary-school students are eligible for 25 percent of the grants; 20,000-100,000—40 percent; 0-20,000—30 percent. The remaining 5 percent would be awarded to community-based organizations. The federal grant shall cover 75 percent of the costs of the demonstration programs. In awarding dropout-prevention grants, the secretary of education shall give first priority to schools with a high dropout rate. The program will become a state grant program under Chapter 1 in 1990.

Immigrant Education.—Extend the 1984 Emergency Immigrant Education Act through 1993 at $40 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter. The program provides financial assistance through state formula grants to local school districts enrolling a substantial number of immigrant students—at least 500 or 3 percent of total student enrollment.

Territorial Assistance.—Authorize $5 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter for general financial assistance to elementary and secondary schools in the Virgin Islands, and authorize $2 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter for teacher-training programs for Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Northern Mariana Islands and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

Excellence in Education.—Repeal the 1984 Excellence in Education Act (PL 89-377) which supported elementary- and secondary-school programs demonstrating ways to improve educational quality.

Improvement Fund.—Authorize $30 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as needed thereafter for grants to state and local educational agencies and other eligible organizations, such as non-profit groups, for programs to improve the performance of students and teachers. Included would be a new "Pride in Schools" program to involve students in the care and responsibility for their school and a new family-school partnership program. The latter, entitled to one-third of the fund's authorization, is to provide grants to LEAs for activities to increase family involvement in a child's education and improve that child's educational achievements.

Secretary's Fund for Innovation.—Establish a fund, authorizing $20 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter, for the following programs: technology education, including educational radio and television programming; computer-based instruction; comprehensive school-health programs; and optional tests for academic excellence.

Alternative-Curriculum Schools.—Create, as part of the secretary's fund, a program to provide grants to schools specializing in certain academic areas that are not eligible for magnet school grants, as long as those districts prove their commitment to integration and quality education. Alternative-curriculum schools must be in a school district that is 65 percent minority; the school must be at least 50 percent minority. The new program could get up to $35 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter, but only if the magnet school program receives full funding.

Child Development Program.—Authorize $25 million a year for a demonstration program to provide educational and social services to young children and their parents. Based on private-sector plans such as the Beethoven project in Chicago, the program will include services such as parenting classes, child-care and nutrition classes. During the first two years, the program can be funded only if the Head Start program receives 104 percent of its fiscal 1988 appropriation.

Disability Demonstration Project.—Authorize $4 million for a statewide project for the disabled, aged infant to adult, and individuals with a limited proficiency in English. The project may include the coordination of existing education and special-service programs for the handicapped and a way to make adaptive technologies, such as alternative communication systems, available to the handicapped.

ADULT EDUCATION

Reauthorize education programs for adults, 16 years or older, who lack the basic educational skills needed for productive employment, or who have not graduated from a secondary school or its equivalent. The bill authorizes $200 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter for grants to states and other eligible participants, such as public or private non-profit agencies, to establish and expand educational programs for economically disadvantaged adults. States and grant recipients may use 5 percent of the award for administrative costs.

Reduce the maximum federal share for adult education programs from 90 percent in fiscal 1989 to 85 percent in fiscal 1990, 80 percent in fiscal 1991 and 75 percent in fiscal 1992 and thereafter.

Delete the 20 percent cap on programs for the institutionalized, requiring that at least 10 percent of state grants be used for corrections education and for the institutionalized.

Create two new literacy programs: (1) work-place literacy partnership grants designed to improve employees' productivity by improving their literacy skills, authorized at $30 million in fiscal 1988, $31.5 in 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter—the grants can be used to fund up to 70 percent of the program and administrative costs; (2) English literacy grants for instruction to adults with a limited proficiency in English, authorized at $25 million in fiscal 1988, $26.3 million in 1989, $27.6 million in 1990, $29 million in 1991, $30.5 million in 1992, and $32 million in 1993.

Require each state with adult education programs to establish an advisory council, appointed by the governor, to review the state's program, submitting a biennial evaluation, and advise state agencies on private-sector initiatives.

Require the education secretary to establish national programs for adult migrant-farm worker and immigrant education, state program analysis and policy studies on adult literacy, and adult literacy volunteer training. The secretary is required to set aside up to 3 percent of total adult education funds for national programs as long as the total appropriation exceeds $108 million and the set-aside does not exceed $3 million.

Abolish the National Advisory Council on Adult Education.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Make single pregnant women, including teenagers, eligible for vocational education services provided under the set-aside for homemakers and single parents (equaling 8.5 percent of state vocational education funds).

Authorize $2 million for Ohio State University and $2 million for the University of California at Berkeley to support the ongoing activities through Dec. 31, 1988, of their respective "National Centers for Research in Vocational Education" while the Comptroller General reviews the grant-award process.

BILINGUAL EDUCATION

Revise the federal program of aid to bilingual education, authorizing $200 million in fiscal 1989 and such sum as necessary thereafter.

Require that at least 60 percent of appropriations be reserved for grants for native-language and alternative instruction, family English-literacy programs, and supplementary special education programs. At least 25 percent of all appropriations must be reserved for bilingual teacher training and technical assistance, including the establishment of 16 resource centers. The bill also provides such sums as necessary, within the authorization level, for data collection and research.

Retain the ceiling on grants to traditional bilingual instruction courses—75 percent of the amount reserved for instruction courses. The bill would allow the education secretary to allocate up to 25 percent of the reserved funds to alternative instructional programs, such as "English as a second language" and "immersion."

Current law limits grants to alternative programs to 4 percent of total appropriations up to $140 million, and half of any additional funds, but no more than 10 percent of the total.

Require that recipients of transitional bilingual education grants in fiscal 1987 continue to receive at least as much through the remainder of existing contracts.

Prohibit, except in certain cases, a student from participating in a federally funded bilingual education program for longer than three years. Under certain conditions, a student could remain in the program for five years.

Establish within the Department of Education an Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Language Affairs to oversee bilingual education programs. The office would submit an annual report to Congress detailing grants made in the preceding year and the number of students who benefited from the programs. In addition, the education secretary must submit a report to Congress by Feb. 1, 1992, assessing the state of bilingual education programs and mapping out a plan to extend the programs and mapping out a plan to extend the programs for another five years.

IMPACT AID

Create a new formula for the "Part A" program of grants—for maintenance and operation of school facilities—to local school districts in areas where enrollments and local revenues are adversely affected by federal activities such as military bases, government offices, Indian lands and low-rent public housing. The bill authorizes $735 million in fiscal 1989, $785 million in 1990, $835 million in 1991, $885 million in 1992, and $935 million in 1993.

Extend the "Part B" program of payments for construction of facilities in federally impacted school districts, authorizing $25 million in fiscal 1989, $26 million in 1990, $27 million in 1991, $28 million in 1992, and $29 million in 1993.

Reduce the existing 16 categories of students to two basic groups: those whose parents work and live on federal property or are Indians (A), and those whose parents live or work on federal property (B).

Divide the categories into five subgroups for payment purposes: districts with 20 percent or more "A" children; 15-20 percent A children; 0-15 percent A children; 20 percent or more "B" children; fewer than 20 percent B children. The bill also establishes distribution rates among the groups when the program is less than fully funded.

EDUCATION STATISTICS

Establish the National Center for Education Statistics within the Department of Education to collect and disseminate education statistics—similar to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The director of the center is to be appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate for a four-year term and is directed to conduct numerous studies, including a national survey of high-school dropouts and another on financial aid for post-secondary schools. The bill authorizes $25.8 million in fiscal year 1988, $32.8 million in 1989, $37.3 million in 1990, and such sums as necessary thereafter.

Include, under the purview of the center, the National Assessment for Educational Progress, which is directed to conduct two demonstration studies: one due in 1990 on math skills; a second due in 1992 on math and reading skills. The studies are intended to provide state-by-state data, contributed on a voluntary basis, of basic educational skills.

Require the secretary of education to conduct a study of school reform to measure student achievement, the number of students graduating (especially from schools with increased graduation requirements as part of their reform efforts) and the amount of money spent on reform programs, and authorize $1 million for the study, which must be submitted to Congress by July 1, 1989.

INDIAN EDUCATION

Authorize $70 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as needed thereafter for grants to LEAs and Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA)-run schools for projects to meet the supplementary educational and cultural needs of Indian schoolchildren. BIA-run schools will receive grants under this provision only after LEAs receive funding equal to what they received in fiscal 1988, plus 2 percent. The bill also reauthorizes demonstration programs for such things as curriculum development and dropout prevention ($38 million per year); fellowship grants for Indian students; and adult education programs.

Prohibit the Interior Secretary from closing any BIA-funded schools without tribal or congressional approval and bar changes in BIA education regulations over the next 14 months.

Strengthen provisions in existing law that require BIA to consult with tribes before making any changes that would affect schools for Indian children. This was in response to an attempt by Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs Ross Swimmer to transfer control of BIA-run schools to LEAs or other organizations.

Create a new grant program, "self-determination grants," to allow tribally controlled schools to receive a block grant for running the school as opposed to operating under a BIA contract. The program would give the tribe more flexibility in deciding how the school should be run.

Create a gifted and talented program for Indian children, authorizing $3 million a year. The program would establish resource centers in two tribal colleges that would provide assistance to five Indian schools in developing educational programs for gifted and talented children.

Create a program for early-childhood development, requiring BIA to coordinate existing educational and social programs for very young children. The bill authorizes $15 million a year for the program.

Establish tribal departments of education (similar to SEAs) to oversee schools run by BIA and by tribes.

Provide authority for a White House Conference on Indian Education to occur between September 1989 and September 1991.

Require the Office of Indian Programs within the Department of Education to give priority to Indians when hiring.

Native Hawaiian Education.—Authorize $10 million in fiscal 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter for supplementary education programs for native Hawaiians, preschool to postsecondary.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation. I want to pay very special tribute to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, and to my good friend and colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING], who is really our father of elementary education on this side of the aisle. In particular I want to thank and join in commending everyone on the committee and in this Congress who worked so hard on this issue of concentration grants, and my district alone will receive over $390,000 more than they would have by virtue of the House adopting a fair, reasonable formula. That is something that this entire country can benefit from.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my wholehearted support of the Conference Report on H.R. 5, the Augustus F. Hawkins and Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary Education Improvement Act. I congratulate Representative AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS, chairman of the Elementary, Secondary, and Vocational Education Subcommittee, and Representative WILLIAM F. GOODLING, and the vice chairman of this subcommittee for their diligence, hard work, and leadership in bringing this omnibus legislation to the floor today.

The Augustus F. Hawkins and Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary Education Improvement Act serves to reaffirm our Federal commitment and cooperation with States and local school districts, through 1993, by enhancing and strengthening elements of our popular current programs while providing for a number of new initiatives. H.R. 5 responds to our Federal focus on enhancing excellence in education, and providing access to a quality education.

Prior to the Easter recess, the House/Senate conference committee completed action on H.R. 5, and I am pleased to share an area of personal commitment and interest: chapter 1—Concentration grants.

One of the last items of difference between the House and Senate bills to be discussed by conferees were chapter 1—concentration grants. These grants are made to local education agencies [LEA's] in counties with a large number or percentage of chapter 1 students. The concentration grant concept was established in 1978, however, the last time it was funded was in 1981. Historically, recipients of concentration grants have been schools located in large, metropolitan areas while our schools in rural communities have been generally overlooked.

The House/Senate conference committee adopted the House version of the concentration grant formula, which I strongly supported, because it considers serving chapter 1 students in less densely populated areas.

An amendment I offered in the full Education and Labor Committee last spring was also adopted by the conference committee. This amendment will assist LEAs that do not receive concentration grants under the formula. State educational agencies [SEA's] are allowed to reserve 2 percent of their concentration grant moneys to distribute to LEA's with concentrations of low-income students, even though the county itself is ineligible for funds.

From a Wisconsin perspective, under the 1978 chapter 1—concentration grant provision, only 5 of Wisconsin's 72 counties were eligible to receive concentration grant dollars. Under the new formula recently agreed to by the conference committee, 19 Wisconsin countries could receive concentration grants. This new formula for allocating concentration grants gives greater sensitivity to schools in smaller, rural communities.

Under the House version, western Wisconsin would be able to secure potential concentration grant funding at a level of $439,000 each year through fiscal year 1993 which would assist in funding LEA's in six western Wisconsin counties. This is a major victory because the Senate version would have authorized only $48,000 for two LEA's in western Wisconsin.

Concentration grants will be implemented when chapter 1 funding is above $4.3 billion per year; $400 million will be allowed for this purpose. Chapter 1 funding for fiscal year 1988 is $4.3 billion. When chapter 1 appropriations exceed $4.7 billion, 10 percent of the total would be devoted to concentration grants.

I greatly appreciate the efforts on behalf of the House concentration grant formula demonstrated by Chairman HAWKINS, Vice chairman GOODLING, and Representative PERKINS. I also want to extend my appreciation to the Congressional Research Service [CRS] Education and Public Welfare Division—which was instrumental in providing numerous concentration grant formula alternatives. Their assistance helped us to formulate a concentration grant formula that will benefit areas of greatest need, rural and urban alike.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to speak on behalf of the Augustus F. Hawkins and Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary Education Improvement Act. I urge my colleagues to support this important conference agreement reauthorizing our elementary and secondary education programs through fiscal year 1993. H.R. 5 will continue a very special partnership providing access to quality education and enhance excellence in education for our elementary and secondary students.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL].

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I, too, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, the Subcommittee on Labor-Health and Human Services-Education, will guarantee that our committee in a bipartisan effort will lead the fight to see that this authorization bill is fully funded. I have had a chance to analyze H.R. 5, both the compensatory and other important programs including the new gifted and talented center, and the teacher service program. I think they have done an outstanding job for their country and I congratulate the ranking and minority ranking leadership on the committee and the committee as a whole for their leadership.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference agreement before us today. The conference agreement on H.R. 5 represents one of the most far-reaching education bills of the decade and I commend the Chairman, Mr. HAWKINS, Mr. JEFFORDS, and our colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] for their forward leadership. H.R. 5 makes good on the Federal promise to join with States and local school districts in enhancing the quality of our Nation's elementary and secondary schools. It does so by offering a package of programs that collectively reaffirm the Federal commitment to access to quality education for disadvantaged students and other students with special needs.

I come to you today as a former educator and local school board member. I am acutely aware that we must encourage and reward excellence in education and provide assistance to children who might otherwise never catch up with their more fortunate classmates. H.R. 5 accomplishes that goal.

However, I must reiterate my belief that the role of the Federal Government in education should be a limited one. Beyond my philosophical opposition to sending tax dollars to Washington, only to see 60 cents returned, it is undeniable that State and local governments are best equipped to know what their particular community needs most. Local governments can provide the kind of flexibility, creativity, and attention to detail that is impossible on the Federal level.

The final version of H.R. 5 includes my amendments on youth suicide prevention. The Roukema amendments establishes authorized youth suicide prevention programs as allowable programs under the Anti-Drug Abuse Act and chapter II block grant fund.

The chapter II block grant, which provides money for such programs as early childhood development, "at risk" students, schoolwide improvements, now includes one more important program: suicide prevention. Let me be clear, this does not mandate suicide prevention education. This allows suicide prevention programs as an option. My amendment allows local schools, if they desire, to apply chapter II block grant money to establish needed programs in youth suicide prevention.

My own district in northern New Jersey was the scene of a terrible tragedy last year. We all remember so vividly that four young people took their own lives. Dramatic evidence of the rising incidence of suicide across the country. In the aftermath, the community sought funds to develop a program to counsel children, teachers, and parents. However, their only recourse was the lengthy, difficult process of applying for a Federal grant, which in the end was denied.

Now, I do not want a national competitive grant program to be the only recourse for communities to receive money if they desire. My amendment is constructed to give the authority solely to the local entity without imposing the Federal Government's will or discretion on local agencies. It is an effort to supplement and help schools deal with a tragic problem within their communities, if they choose that option.

The school is the one institution that is the common denominator for all these students. The purpose of my amendment is to use the schools to identify high-risk students and to identify them before they drop out. In addition, our local option provides the opportunity for the community to decide if there is a genuine need. Principals, school teachers and officials who are most sensitive to the specific local circumstances will have the opportunity to establish programs and train personnel.

There is no doubt that suicide among teenagers is among the most serious social problems in that age group. Suicide is the leading cause of death among persons between the ages of 15 and 24, second only to traffic fatalities. The number of young people taking their lives has increased greatly in the last few decades.

Last year, the Subcommittee on Elementary, Secondary and Vocational Education conducted hearings on teenage suicide prevention. A panel of expert witnesses offered their advice on how to prevent these tragedies. The experts confirmed that there is a well-established relationship between drug abuse and youth suicide. My amendment recognizes this connection between drugs problems and other problems facing our young people.

Mr. Speaker, no piece of legislation can be perfect and this bill is no exception. I have serious reservations about one program included in H.R. 5—that is the Bilingual Education Act. I have long been a critic of the Bilingual Education Program for its failure to recognize the need to teach English to non-English speaking children as early as possible. Experience, during the life of this program, has demonstrated that teaching students in their native language has not proven effective.

Although this compromise allows additional funding for alternative teaching methods such as "immersion" and "English as a second language," I would have liked to have seen it go further. While alternative methods provide some flexibility, bilingual education programs should be geared toward getting school children assimilated into English-speaking classes rapidly and effectively.

The inability to speak English can severely hamper a citizen's ability to participate fully in the mainstream of America. We should not hesitate to support educational methods that ensure such participation.

Another issue of great concern to me was the program improvement provision. Program improvement requires States to perform evaluations of local education agencies to determine improvement or decline in school progress. State and local jurisdiction must be clearly defined. While locals deserve the freedom to determine their curricula and programs, States have certain oversight authority to ensure that schools remain in compliance with basic program requirements.

The conference agreement carefully balances this relationship. States will receive a percentage of program funds to be used at the local level for program improvement. Furthermore the compromise allows local agencies workable time frames for improvements and provides States with the needed funds to help implement such changes. The dual Federal and State commitment is clearly formalized in this compromise. I commend my colleague Mr. GOODLING for his tireless effort in forging this solution.

Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of compromise the House accepted the Senate proposal on magnet schools, but not without a fight! The Senate proposal establishes a separate program, identical to magnet schools, yet without desegregation as the main objective. I simply do not see the need for establishing a new costly program for alternative schools. The current program is effective and commendable in its purpose, yet underfunded.

Magnet schools have established quality schools in areas with a high concentration of minority students. These schools have excelled in their academic standards and vocational skills. They offer a curriculum capable of attracting substantial numbers of students of different racial backgrounds. But most noteworthy, students are accepted on the basis of talent, not wealth.

Although magnet schools are one of the most effective programs in H.R. 5, in the last year only 48 of the 126 districts which applied for funds received them. There simply was not enough money to be distributed.

There can be no questioning the impact and far-reaching effects of this bill. It's scope reaches all ages; from early intervention programs for our very young, to dropout prevention and school improvement for teenagers and adults to close-up programs for the elderly. I want to commend my colleagues from the House and Members from the other Chamber for their diligent efforts in fashioning this final piece of legislation.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 5, particularly the magnet school section, the bilingual section and the Indian education programs in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, as we know, H.R. 5 is a major piece of legislation that reauthorizes almost every elementary and secondary education program until 1993, and creates a number of new initiatives. However, I would like to touch briefly on three areas in the bill in which I have a particular interest.

As sponsor of the legislation to reauthorize the magnet schools, I am especially pleased that H.R. 5 incorporates this popular and important program. Magnet schools specialize in different programs and draw students throughout desegregating school districts with an interest or aptitude in that subject. As a result of this creative approach to education, magnet schools bring together children from varying social, economic, and racial backgrounds. It is the only Federal program that combines desegregation efforts with academic excellence, and I am proud to be the sponsor of legislation that continues the historical purpose and intent of magnet schools.

There has always been a heavy demand by local school districts for magnet school grants, and I am pleased that the conferees were able to provide more funding for this program—$165 million has been authorized for fiscal year 1989, and such sums thereafter. The increased authorization level is more than double the current figure and reflects the great need throughout the United States for funds to facilitate desegregation within school districts. I am grateful that conferees were so supportive of the original intent of magnet schools and provided additional funding for the continuation of this vital program.

H.R. 5 also incorporates legislation to reauthorize bilingual education. In addition to simply extending this program, H.R. 5 makes several changes that were in response to hearings and research on bilingual education. Moreover, H.R. 5 authorizes $200 million for fiscal year 1989 and such sums thereafter—an increase over current funding levels. H.R. 5 recognizes that the number of limited-English-proficient [LEP] students has been expanding rapidly; indeed, demographic projections indicate that the LEP student population will continue to grow 2½ times as fast as the overall student population through the end of the century.

H.R. 5 reserves at least 60 percent of appropriations for bilingual education programs, but also emphasizes the importance of instruction in the student's native language by stipulating that 75 percent of this amount be directed toward traditional bilingual education. The bill also encourages the use of developmental bilingual education, a novel approach in which students with different language backgrounds learn from and teach one another their respective languages. This method is an important one which may lead to both the acquisition of English and successful academic achievement by limited-English-proficient students. Moreover, H.R. 5 recognizes the importance of training teachers for bilingual education by reserving 25 percent of appropriations for this purpose.

I also take particular pleasure in the amendments to Indian education programs included in title V of the conference report. As a member of the committee who has had a decade-long commitment to meeting the educational needs of native Americans, I have had the lead role in crafting these provisions. Two provisions are of primary importance in the effort to obtain true self-determination. The first is the prohibition in the bill against any unilateral transfer of Bureau of Indian Affairs schools to third-party, nontribal entities. The second is a new authority to fund tribally controlled community schools under a grant authority, which will provide more flexibility and local control than the current contract authority. In passing the new grants authority, the Congress will be taking another historic step in its relationship with Indian nations. The policy provision in the grants authority specifically repudiates the outdated and failed policy of unilateral termination of treaties and the trust relationship between Indian nations and the United States. The policy of termination, set forth in a House concurrent resolution in 1953, has been a dark shadow on our relationships with our Indian constituents for the past 35 years. Today, we admit the error of the past, lift this cloud, and move forward.

In reauthorizing the Indian Education Act Program, the conference report has simplified the measure by reenacting the current, disorganized set of authorities into a separate, freestanding authorization. I am also proud that the conference report addresses the problem of proof of eligibility for services. Briefly, the problem of proof eligibility surfaced in 1985, when the department attempted to restrict the eligibility of Indian students to participate in this program by limiting the acceptable proofs which the students' parents could bring forward. Whether done for programmatic reasons or as an attempt to cut down the budget and justification for this program, the effect was to cut the eligible population of students in half and to effectively terminate the programs for urban and non-reservation-based school districts. Note that this was not a matter of whether or not these students were eligible. It was a matter of whether they could prove eligibility.

In fashioning a response, the conferees have been greatly aided by the cooperation of the entire Indian community. Basically, the conferees agree that the form, which was used in the 1985-86 school year to establish eligibility, will continue to be the form used for this purpose. The department shall continue to request specific information as set out on that form. However, the statute makes it clear that: First, other proof of eligibility shall be likewise considered and valid; second, the Secretary shall establish no limitations of the proof to be considered and failure to fill out any parts of the form shall not be sufficient, in and of itself, to find a child ineligible; and third, the policies and practices in effect in academic year 1985-86 relating to sufficiency of proof of eligibility, specifically including the rule on "good-faith compliance," shall be used in reviewing the forms submitted. Nothing in the statute is meant to require submission to the department of all forms.

The conference report also calls upon the President to convene a White House Conference on Indian Education. Such a national meeting is overdue. I look forward eagerly to the discussion surrounding preparation for, and actual participation in, this national conference, and anticipate recommendations from this body which will lead to substantial improvements.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor and indeed, a delight for me to rise to offer my strong support for the conference report on the bill H.R. 5, now known as the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988. In my view, there is no justifiable reason why this conference report should not be passed unanimously.

As usual, Chairman HAWKINS and his Elementary and Secondary Education Subcommittee staff are to be commended for their outstanding work in bringing to the House a conference report that each and every Member of Congress can be proud of. I would like to commend the majority and minority counsels for the subcommittee, and in particular, Jack Jennings, for their diligence in defending the House position during staff negotiations on the proposal before us. Not only should Chairman HAWKINS and his staff be proud of the work they have done on this measure, in fact, when these amendments are enacted into law, the entire Congress should be proud of the renewed commitment to quality effective education that H.R. 5 will foster.

While there are many notable provisions in the conference report, in particular, I am pleased with the provisions dealing with dropouts which I first proposed in H.R. 738, the School Dropout Demonstration Assistance Act. For the first time in years, the Federal Government will once again devote funding for the express purpose of addressing the plight of young people who have either dropped out of school or who are contemplating dropping out. The $50 million dollars authorized for this new program will more than be repaid with the useful information we will garner from the results of the programs set up for dropouts.

With the implementation of this section of H.R. 5, we will begin the process of rescuing the futures of thousands of young people who otherwise would be destined to become part of society's growing underclass.

I also want to discuss an issue that has become very popular in these days of record setting budget deficits—the issue of fiscal accountability. While attention has understandably been focused on fiscal accountability with the expenditure of Federal funds, H.R. 5 ensures that this focus is clear by putting in place requirements for program quality and improvement.

Chapter 1 now has a mandate that clearly states that local educational agencies and State educational agencies must assume responsibility for improving chapter 1 programs when they are not helping children to make substantial progress toward achieving local goals in terms of the basic and advanced skills that all children are expected to master. Thus, children not showing meaningful progress toward achieving those local goals will not be subjected to repeating a program that has failed to improve their level of skills. This will serve the dual purpose of ensuring that Federal funds are spent wisely with positive results.

As stated in H.R. 5, the Local Educational Agency [LEA] will begin the process of assessing the effectiveness of its chapter 1 programs and submit full evaluation results to their respective State Educational Agency [SEA]. If the program has not helped students to make substantial progress during the first year in question toward achieving locally determined outcomes expressed in terms of the basic and more advanced skills that all children are expected to master, then the LEA is obligated to institute a program improvement plan. If this plan does not result in adequate improvement to achieve the desired outcomes, the LEA, jointly with the SEA, develops and implements a further program improvement plan, with program improvement assistance made available from the appropriate source by the SEA. In this instance, the SEA has two well defined roles, both of which affect the quality of the program. The first is in program improvement and technical assistance and the second is in program monitoring and enforcement. Thus, we ensure that Federal funds spent on this program will be used in a most fiscally responsible manner.

Another provision which I would like to make mention of is the coordination of chapter 1 programs with regular school programs that schools employ to help students master basic skills. Many times minority and poor children, those often served by chapter 1, are most at risk of being placed in lower tracks of the regular program, misclassified, given a watered down curriculum, and held to lower expectations than their peers. All too often these students are assigned to a group or track which is itself not designed to accomplish mainstreamed achievement of the skills which the school has deemed appropriate for its students.

With respect to chapter 1, enactment of H.R. 5 will mean that schools will have to examine the chapter 1 students' regular program and modify any features, including grouping practices, which may be frustrating achievement of the overall chapter 1 goals. Thus, the coordination called for in H.R. 5 will result in curricular goals which will foster meaningful achievement for chapter 1 children which parallels the achievement expected from regular program students.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me just say that this conference agreement and the bill it relates to, the Hawkins-Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988, signals a new day in addressing the priorities of those who will, someday, plan our space missions, run our corporations, write our newspapers, and in fact, take our places in this very Chamber. In short, when it comes to priorities, the well-being of our children should be at the top of the list. H.R. 5 recognizes that priority and does so in a manner that we can all stand behind. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support passage of this most worthwhile agreement.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MARTINEZ].

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the bill and to commend Chairman HAWKINS on the excellent job he's done in providing us with a bill that truly deserves bipartisan support.

His staff and all of the conferees' staff should be commended also for their outstanding effort to resolve the differences of the Members and the House and the Senate.

It is approriate that this bill has been named in recognition of Chairman GUS HAWKINS who, as a Member of the House for the past 26 years, has been one of the most stalwart advocates of education and training programs in this effort to open opportunities for all Americans.

H.R. 5 reauthorizes over a dozen elementary and secondary education programs. It strengthens accountability by ensuring program improvement in schools with lagging chapter I programs; it sets priorities for chapter II block grants, and strengthens data collection and evalation, as well as reforming audit procedures.

The compromise on NAEP strikes a reasonsable balance and it helps meet our nation's need for quality information on educational achievement, while avoiding wasteful spending, biased or misleading data, or creation of a national curriculum.

Kindergarten is too late if we want cost-effective educational excellence. Head Start and other programs show that an "ounce of prevention" in early childhood education boosts achievement and saves taxpayer dollars by preempting school failure, dropping out, and unemployment problems. The Federal Government saves $6 eventually for every dollar spent on high quality preschool programs. The "even start" program will provide preschool education to younger children, and provide a bridge between Head Start and programs for older disadvantaged children.

Mr. Speaker, another important aspect of the bill deals with our Nation's high dropout rate. Dropping out of school means dropping off the ladder of achievement and economic independence. H.R. 5 establishes a Dropout Prevention Program to keep at-risk students in school and to help those who have dropped out get back into the classroom.

At a time when command of languages is increasingly important for American competitiveness and security, and when the limited English school population is growing at a rate three times that of the general school population, America needs to invest in our language resources. Bilingual education and improved foreign language education programs do this.

As author of the legislation reauthorizing the Emergency Immigrant Education Act, and coauthor of the legislation reauthorizing bilingual education I've worked with other Members to meet this important need.

With other Members we have worked for flexibility in bilingual education including acceptance of the Senate provisions on innovative programs and improved assessment of achievement in building English language proficiency. Along with foreign language programs, developmental bilingual classes that build student proficiency in two languages are an essential part of America's investment in language resources for commerce and community. The department currently funds just 2 developmental programs—accounting for one fourth of 1 percent of part a funds. It is essential that title VII's flexibility include increased funding for developmental bilingual programs. Other changes in title VII strengthen parent involvement and enhance service to minority language handicapped students.

It is ironic that America's first children have yet to receive the kind of educational services they are entitled to—in part due to the department's effort to unreasonably restrict the participation of LEP American Indian children in bilingual education. H.R. 5 narrows the Secretary's discretion to ensure that these children receive the educational opportunities they need.

Long waiting lists for adult English courses have been reported in many parts of our country. In Los Angeles alone over 40,000 adults were on waiting lists. The new immigration law's English proficiency requirement is amplifying this need. The English Literacy Grants Program, which I introduced, stimulates grass-roots programs by local schools, community organizations, and others to provide the English language skills adults need to participate in America's vast opportunities.

A Star Schools Program is established to help speed schools along the learning curve in adopting telecommunications and electronic technology to the classroom. This is a significant step toward creation of an electronic classroom that enhances the ability of teachers to better meet the educational needs of all our Nation's students.

Mr. Speaker, America cannot afford to lose so many of its best and brightest young people just because they are not male, their skin is not white, or they live in a neighborhood where property values are low. America cannot let so many of its young people fall through a hole in the flag. America offers the best education in the world for some students—but it provides a Third World education for others. H.R. 5 works to ensure equal educational opportunity and to build the American community so that our Republic will never become a land of the separate and the unequal.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fawell].

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Speaker, as a conferee on H.R. 5, the conference report to the School Improvement Act is one bill that we can all unanimously and enthusiastically support. Our good colleagues, Augustus Hawkins and Bill Goodling, are to be commended for their fine efforts to steer this legislation through conference.

H.R. 5 is critical to the Federal Government's commitment to education. The well-respected report "A Nation At Risk" leads me to conclude that too many of our young people are inadequately prepared to meet the challenges of the 21st century. The reforms included in H.R. 5 are designed to help us meet those challenges for the next century.

H.R. 5 reauthorizes and improves every major elementary and secondary education program, including chapter 1 compensatory education, chapter 2 school improvement, math and science teacher training, drug prevention education, bilingual education, adult education, and magnet schools. H.R. 5 also establishes some new and bold initiatives tackling illiteracy, improving basic skills and keeping potential dropouts in school, providing assistance to gifted and talented children, and improving the performance of students and teachers.

The major focus on H.R. 5 is the reauthorization of chapter 1 compensatory education. Chapter 1, the centerpiece of Federal efforts for improving the basic skill needs of educationally disadvantaged children, is already a good program. The conference report makes it better by including several provisions designed to improve chapter 1's effectiveness and help educationally disadvantaged children master grade-level proficiency.

The most significant improvement requires chapter 1 schools to meet certain achievement standards and reverse any declining achievement trends. If the chapter 1 program shows no significant improvement after 1 year, the local school district must provide the necessary technical assistance to bring the program up to par. If there is no improvement in achievement rates after 2 years, the local school district must work in partnership with the State educational agency to prevent further decline and implement the necessary reforms. The program improvement provisions are crucial for ensuring that schools will be accountable for addressing the needs of their educationally disadvantaged students.

An effective chapter 1 program is also dependent on parental involvement. School districts will be required to develop programs, activities, and procedures to involve parents in the education of their children. Parents will be directly involved in the planning and implementation of chapter 1 programs.

Introducing innovative concepts in chapter 1 will help to sustain and enhance the program's effectiveness. School districts will now be allowed to use up to 5 percent of their chapter 1 grants for innovative projects, including incentive payments to schools that have demonstrated success, encouraging innovative approaches for parental involvement, and fostering community and private sector participation in the program.

The conference report also recognizes that a correlation exists between low academic achievement and areas with high poverty levels. H.R. 5 includes a concentration grant formula that truly targets additional chapter 1 funding to high poverty school districts where the number of poor children exceeds 6,500 or 15 percent of enrollment.

Two new initiatives are incorporated into chapter 1: First, Even Start; and second, basic skills improvement and dropout prevention. Even Start will expand chapter 1 services to at-risk children ages 1-7 and their parents. This partnership of early childhood and adult education is based on the understanding that childhood advancements in education are linked to the presence of literate parents at home.

Helping at-risk high school students and keeping them in school is the purpose of the Basic Skills Improvement and Dropout Prevention Program. This program provides much needed basic skills services to educationally deprived secondary students, helps to keep students from dropping out of school, and encourages those who have dropped out to return and finish school.

The conference report wisely maintains the block grant approach of the chapter 2 program. This school improvement program gives States and local school districts the flexibility to meet changing educational needs—something which they could not achieve through numerous, small categorical programs. Local school districts may use their chapter 2 funds to improve education in several broad areas, including programs for at-risk children, gifted and talented children, teacher training, and effective schools.

Several improvements are made in the math and science teacher training program under the conference report. The current program has been ineffective because of hampering set-asides and reporting requirements. H.R. 5 streamlines the present program by limiting funding to math and science teacher training, thus eliminating funding for computer learning and foreign language instruction.

The conference report channels an overwhelming majority of funding to local school districts, ensuring that enough funding will be available to operate effective teacher training programs. In cases where school districts receive small grants, they may apply for funding in a consortium with other school districts or higher education institutions. This provision, which is a variation of an amendment I offered in committee and was included in the original House bill, helps to put viable teacher training programs in place.

The conference agreement also sets aside 4 percent of the overall appropriation for the Secretary's discretionary fund to conduct national programs. Although an original draft of the math and science program eliminated the Secretary's discretionary fund, I felt that such a set-aside was needed. The committee eventually adopted my view that this relatively new program needed direction at the Federal level to determine what works in math and science teacher training. The Secretary will award grants for programs of national significance in math and science instruction and disseminate information about exemplary national programs to State educational agencies, school districts, and higher education institutions.

The most positive and unexpected changes in H.R. 5 are probably made in bilingual education. As an original sponsor of legislation which would give school districts greater flexibility in determining the method of instruction for teaching limited English proficient [LEP] children, I am genuinely pleased that the conference report lifts the 4-percent funding cap on special alternative instruction programs to 25 percent. This reform in the bilingual program is critical and recognizes that the research does not demonstrate that transitional bilingual education, or native-language instruction, is more effective than special alternative instruction—usually English as a second language or English immersion—in teaching LEP children.

Under the current program, only 4 percent of part A funding can be used for special alternative instruction programs. The remaining 96 percent is earmarked for native-language instruction programs. H.R. 5 lifts the cap on alternative instruction to 25 percent.

Lifting the cap on alternative instruction to 25 percent takes into account the concerns of many local school districts that this method of instruction best meets their needs for educating LEP children. When school districts must educate LEP children from numerous language backgrounds, alternative instruction provides very diverse students with the most efficient method of preparing them to read, speak, and write English.

The demand for alternative instruction clearly exists. In 1985, the first year alternative instruction funding was available to school districts, over 25 percent of the grant applicants requested this type of funding. With the restrictions on alternative instruction loosened, there may even be a greater demand for these grants.

To ensure that LEP children move into all-English classrooms as quickly as possible, H.R. 5 limits student enrollment in federally funded bilingual programs to no longer than 3 years. This restriction ensures that quality bilingual education programs will be implemented.

The success of magnet schools is affirmed under H.R. 5. Research shows that magnet schools are successful at fostering educational excellence, giving parents broader choices for their children's education, and achieving racial desegregation without forced busing. More importantly, the existence of magnet schools in a school district may challenge other schools to improve the quality of their programs, resulting in benefits to the entire school system.

Congressional and administration support for this program is rightfully growing. The House-passed budget resolution increases the appropriation for magnet schools from $72 million this year to $110 million in 1989. I strongly support H.R. 5's $165 million authorization for this program in fiscal 1989.

Because magnet schools have been successful, H.R. 5 establishes a new program of alternative curriculum schools, which are very similar to magnet schools. Under this program, grants will be made to schools specializing in certain academic areas that are not eligible for magnet school assistance, as long as those school districts prove their commitment to integration and quality education. Eligible schools must be in districts that are at least 65 percent minority, and the school itself must have at least 50 percent minority enrollment.

The conference report also includes initiatives to tackle illiteracy, particularly among limited English proficient adults. A new component of the adult education program authorizes funding for adults with limited English proficiency. Because adult education services are in great demand, the basic grant program is not able to serve all of the eligible limited English proficient adults. This new program specifically targets this population for adult education services.

Improvements I sought in the Drug Free Schools and Communities Act to help States and localities get drugs out of schools and off college campuses are incorporated in the conference report. I authored a change requiring local applicants to describe the extent of the drug and alcohol problems in their schools. The applicant must also describe its drug and alcohol policy, including an explanation of the practices and procedures it will strictly enforce to eliminate the sale or use of drugs and alcohol on school premises.

To determine if schools are implementing effective programs and demonstrating success in combating drug use, the conference report includes my amendment requiring the local applicant to submit progress reports to the State educational agency. The reports must include information about the applicant's significant accomplishments and the extent to which the original objectives of the plan were achieved. If the State agency determines that the applicant is not making reasonable progress toward accomplishing its objectives, it must provide technical assistance to the applicant.

The School Improvement Act embodies significant policy changes in our Federal elementary and secondary education programs. These improvements reflect the changing needs in educating our Nation's young people and preparing them for their future. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this conference report and its significant policy changes.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Wise].

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference agreement on H.R. 5, the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Amendments of 1988. As a member of the conference committee I worked very closely with the legislation. I truly feel that this agreement reflects the best combination of House and Senate bills. I would like to speak to one part of the bill in which I have a particular interest, the comprehensive child care development centers. The conference agreement authorizes $25 million in competitive grant money for pilot projects designed to help insure that the very young, potentially at-risk children get a fair chance. The centers, which are to be tailored to local needs, will coordinate existing services and fill in the gaps where necessary. The goal of such centers is to bring the various vital services under one roof, or at least provide easy access to them. I have heard many stories of how families were referred from one agency to another until they finally gave up, or how families were unable to take advantage of the services offered because they could not not get to the facility during business hours.

The services provided under this initiative will include: prenatal and postnatal nutrition, infant screening, maternal health and nutrition, parent support groups, home visits by peer paraprofessionals, as well as job training programs. The object is to reach kids before the damage is done. More and more research is showing the vital importance of the first 3 years of life. Such programs make good economic sense. We need to start spending our limited budget more wisely, this includes putting more money into very early intervention programs. There is language earmarking funds for rural areas such as West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, $300 billion per year is spent on education from age 6 to 18. Yet less than $1 billion is spent from birth to 6. Our child development center program begins to correct this. This initiative projects need to exist for at least 5 years. Mr. Speaker, I again urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the conference report.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Henry].

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I want to add my thanks and congratulations to Chairman Hawkins and to my ranking Republican Representatives Jeffords and Goodling and to their staffs for their hard work and constructive effort in bringing this bipartisan education bill to this point.

I am pleased to have played a part in crafting what is one of the more important educational reforms in this bill—the effort to include educational accountability in the chapter 1 program. For many years we have required local school districts to show compliance with fiscal requirements of chapter 1. We have not, up to this point, required that they show educational achievement on the part of the students served as a result of receiving these funds. The so-called program evaluation and program improvement sections of this bill require that schools evaluate the educational progress of students in the chapter 1 program. Where improvement is not shown, assistance by, first, the local school district, and then by the State educational agency, is required until that program is turned around.

I want to also highlight two other changes in chapter 1 requirements which I hope will go a long way in achieving a better targeting of these funds on the students we intend to help. One is a specific requirement that schools which receive chapter 1 funds select for the program those students within the school who are in greatest need of these compensatory education services. Thus if a school has students in the program who are at a higher achievement level than others who are not in the program, the school must be able to show a specific reason, such as that the school is not serving a particular grade level, for that situation.

The second change requires that, just as special attention must be given to a school program that is not showing improvement in educational achievement, so too special attention must be given to individual students who are not improving educationally despite participation in the chapter 1 program. If, after one year in the program, a student has not made progress toward achieving grade level, the school and school district must review the chapter 1 program and its appropriateness to that student's needs. If the situation continues for a second year, a more complete evaluation of the student's needs must be done. One of the unfortunate problems associated with the number of special and compensatory education programs set up over the past two decades or so is the frequent lack of coordination between programs and the placement of students in one program or another on the basis of factors other than which one best fits the student's specific needs. Hopefully this provision, along with specific requirements for coordination amongst a school's programs, will help to prevent chapter 1 from becoming a separate educational track as sometimes now occurs.

These amendments, along with the effort to concentrate funds in areas of greatest poverty, go to several of the shortcomings of the current chapter 1 program which I and Representative Petri identified at the beginning of the reauthorization process and which led us to introduce reform legislation called Children's Options for Intensive Compensatory Education [Choice]. The reforms we proposed were considered radical, particularly for an area—education—in which reform comes slowly and painfully, and were indeed too radical for this reauthorization. While I am pleased that the concerns we raised were at least the cause of some changes in the program in this reauthorization, the route taken to much needed educational accountability in this bill comes at a price—increased bureaucratic requirements and control. I would have preferred, and the Choice bill proposed, a different approach—to give greater responsibility and accountability to parents, by encouraging a variety of institutions and organizations to offer remedial education services, and allowing poor parents the opportunity to choose the best program for their child. That would have required a more dramatic change in the chapter 1 program, which this bill does not make. But I hope that we can continue to search for new ways of making this program more effective in giving the benefits and opportunities of education to our disadvantaged youth.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Perkins].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I am able to rise today and to voice my strong support for the conference agreement on H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act.

I want to express my great appreciation to my distinguished chairman for his leadership throughout this conference. We were very successful in carrying the overwhelming charge that was given to the conferees with the passage of the original legislation by a vote of 401 to 1 back in May of 1987. We were able to do this because of the leadership of Chairman Hawkins and the bipartisan commitment to the legislation that was shared by the conferees.

This legislation contains many positive programs that are going to directly impact on the lives of children and adults all across this great Nation. They may be in a school district that receives funds from the chapter 2 block grant that will enable the school to provide programs for gifted and talented children or to target the "at risk" children who may be likely to become dropouts. Also included are programs that will help with our efforts in math and science education, immigrant education, adult education, magnet schools and may more critically important areas.

In particular I am excited about the conference agreement that renewed this Government's commitment to the chapter 1 program which has proven to be a shining example of how a Federal program can successfully work in assisting the local school districts with basic grants. Of primary interest is the agreement to endorse the House version of the $400 million concentration grant. Within the framework that was agreed upon we will see the most deserving of the youth in this country targeted for additional assistance. We are answering the few critics that say that chapter 1 is not targeted enough by showing that we are willing to zero in on the most needy with our valuable Federal support.

I want to particularly point out my satisfaction with the specifics of the distribution formula that will fairly recognize the extremely high levels of poverty children that exist in the rural South. Twenty-five years after the "War on Poverty" programs were introduced we are still seeing the rampant growth poverty in the Appalachian regions because of the lack of needed education and economic development. The support that will be coming in the form of concentration grants is welcome indeed so that we may continue with the war at the most important level, our children.

We may throw around millions for other wars on foreign shores and question the reasoning and purpose but this is the true war for freedom that is going on today all across this country. Our people seek the freedom that only an education and a sense of self-worth can bring. All of us should commit our time and effort to assist in this battle so that some day all of our own people will be able to experience the true meaning of a phrase many only sing about: "Let Freedom Ring."

I call on all Members of this body to show their commitment to this cause of freedom and cast a vote in support of the timely and critically needed education legislation. For our Nation's future I feel we must support H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Solarz].

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin first of all by paying tribute to our extraordinarily distinguished chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. Hawkins], for the magnificent leadership he has provided in bringing this historic legislation before us today. Tribute is also owed to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Jeffords], the ranking minority member of the committee, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Goodling], and to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who made the adoption of this legislation possible. The enactment of this conference report will go a long way toward making this country a stronger country and a better country because it will provide the children of our Nation with the opportunity to receive the kind of quality education to which they are entitled.

The centerpiece of this bill, in my judgment, is the reauthorization of chapter 1, which provides Federal funding for those educationally and economically disadvantaged youngsters who need remedial educational assistance if they are going to be able to fulfill their intellectual potential. I am particularly pleased to take note of a provision in this conference report which will authorize incremental increases of $500 million a year for the duration of the bill so that by 1993 literally every child in America who is economically or educationally disadvantaged will be able to get the benefit of the chapter 1 program, assuming, of course, our colleagues on the Appropriations Committee see fit to appropriate the necessary funding. But this provision constitutes a kind of educational bill of rights for the young people of our country. It means that everyone will have the opportunity to get the education they deserve, and I therefore urge the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GRANDY].

Mr. GRANDY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I join with the rest of my colleagues on the Education and Labor Committee and fellow conferees in saluting the chairman and vice chairman of the committees and appropriate subcommittees who fashioned this very important legislation, appropriately named the School Improvement Act.

Mr. Speaker, we are all familiar with the catch-phrase that by investing in education, we are investing in our future. How true. And education is also a vital beginning for solutions to immediate problems—unemployment, poverty, crime, and drug abuse. Today, we are voting on one of the most important reauthorization bills which the 100th Congress will debate: The School Improvement Act. I want to take this opportunity to thank my Education and Labor Committee colleagues for their cooperative approach in fashioning this legislation.

The bill before us represents the Federal effort to assist in what is a basic function of the State governments. While we are continuing an effective program of assistance for disadvantaged students, we have at the same time maintained local control over the program—a major reform of the previous reauthorizing legislation.

Central to the School Improvement Act is the chapter 1 program which has proven to be a successful assistance package to our schools. Although I am supportive of chapter 1, I am concerned about the formula used to distribute these Federal funds. The legislation requires 1980 census data to be used in determining need. As we all know, rural areas of the Midwest have undergone a tremendous economic transformation since 1980, and although improvements are being made, statistics taken from 1980 will simply not be an accurate measure of need in 1992. It is important to remember that this reauthorization will extend the chapter 1 program through 1993—13 years beyond the 1980 census data. I point this out to remind everyone that there is much work remaining to be done. I hope the programs we are reauthorizing will serve us well until we again have the opportunity to improve Federal education programs.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the conference agreement before the committee.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues from the Education and Labor Committee in expressing my strong support for the conference agreement on H.R. 5—the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988.

I want to take a minute to thank our distinguished chairman for joining with me in the effort to reinvigorate the Math and Science Program which H.R. 5 will reauthorize for the next 5 years. The new Math and Science Program will have a noticable impact on school districts across the country. The previous law suffered from two serious defects which undermined its effectiveness; lack of funding and lack of focus. Essentially, the goals of the program fell prey to far too many intentions and requirements.

The new program substantially simplifies administration of the program and—instead of requiring that States divide the money 13 different ways—drives nearly 75 percent of the available funds to local school districts. Local school districts are permitted to decide how they can best use their math and science funds and Taylor programs to meet their local needs.

The litany would be hackneyed if its implications weren't so dangerous.

It has become almost cliche to cite the need to increase, dramatically, the math and science skills of todays students—and there is a great deal of evidence that we have a long way to go. There are 7,100 high schools in this country that do not offer physics courses, 4,200 offer no chemistry courses, and 1,900 offer no courses in biology. In fact, only one-third of the students in grades 10 through 12 take any science courses at all.

Where will we get the next generation of American scientists and the full spectrum of workers literate in math and science? Good question. An even better question might be: Where will we find the teachers to teach them? One of the primary reasons that so many schools are unable to offer good math and science curriculum is that there are not nearly enough teachers qualified to teach those disciplines. Those who are qualified can usually be found in other, more lucrative fields. Factor in the probability that one-half of our Nations 2.5 million teachers will turn over within the next decade and you can see that we are facing a clear and present danger.

My legislation emphasizes the teacher training and retraining needs of local schools. That might mean recruiting new teachers, retaining the current biology teacher who was actually trained in English, or by offering in-service training opportunities such as summer seminars of school year course work at postsecondary institutions.

The conference agreement authorizes $250 million for this program and the expectation is that the Appropriation's Committee will treat the Math and Science Program as a high priority. I urge my colleagues to examine this program very carefuly because it offers great promise to school districts attempting to upgrade the quality of math and science instruction.

Let me conclude by thanking my chairman for his devotion to the concept of quality in educational opportunity. This was a long and difficult conference and due, in large measure, to his efforts were we able to produce this landmark reauthorization.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I would like to engage in a colloquy with the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], chairman of the Committee, regarding section 2402 of part D of H.R. 5 which is funding for research in vocational education.

Is it the chairman's understanding that the $2 million made available to the Ohio State University and the $2 million made available to University of California at Berkeley under section 2402 of part D was intended to cover the cost of performing research on vocational education during the time period beginning January 1, 1988 through December 31, 1988?

Mr. HAWKINS. If the gentleman will yield, yes, that is my understanding.

Mr. GOODLING. Then both institutions would be able to use funds provided under this legislation to pay for the costs of such research during the first quarter of 1988?

Mr. HAWKINS. Yes, that was the intention of the conference committee.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his response.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like also to compliment the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], our ranking member. This may be his last hurrah on this side as far as education is concerned, and then we will have to deal with him across the table next time over on the Senate side, and we will beat him down just like we did the rest of those Senators over there. But he has meant so much to the children of this Nation and I think we owe him a debt of gratitude.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, yielding myself such time as I may consume, I join in that reference to the ranking minority member and commend him. His support in this instance and in many other instances has proven him to be one of the great statesmen I think of this session and previous sessions. I will certainly miss him. But I want to wish him certainly much happiness and success. I do not know whether it is a promotion or not, but when he goes to the Cave of the Winds, I hope he will bring some stability.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to thank my colleagues, the chairman of the committee and my ranking members on the primary and secondary committees for their very kind words. Certainly I have enjoyed nothing more than serving with these two gentlemen and look forward to continue working with them. I am not through this year and I am going to continue to work. But I do appreciate very much their kind remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, today we are considering the conference report to H.R. 5, the Augustus Hawkins and Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1988. This bill makes a number of changes which will improve the basic educational services that are provided to needy students throughout the country. There are three programs in this bill that I would like to focus upon: the State-operated program for handicapped children, the Bilingual Education Program, and the national assessment of educational progress.

The State-operated program for handicapped children, commonly known as the 89-313 program, is the predecessor to Public Law 94-142, the Education for all Handicapped Children Act. In 1965, when the 89-313 program was created, most students with severe handicaps were educated in segregated facilities with little or no opportunity to interact with their nonhandicapped peers. With the enactment of Public Law 94-142 which requires a free and appropriate education for all handicapped children, segregation of severely handicapped children has been greatly reduced. However, there are many States which continue to segregate severely handicapped students under the 89-313 program.

This conference report will allow the Congress to learn more about the 89-313 program in terms of where the program is now and where it ought to go in the future. Since 1965, when the 89-313 program was created, information on who participate in the program has been very limited. H.R. 5 will require the State Educational Agency as part of its grant application to report annually to the Secretary of Education on the number of children served in the 89-313 program according to age, type of disability, and the location of their educational placement. This information will tell us exactly who participates in the program and how they are being educated.

In addition, this conference report authorizes the GAO to conduct a study on the State-operated program for handicapped children. This study will include a description of State and local agencies that participate in the program, the children and the agencies serve, and the program for which the agencies use funds. GAO will look at how the program is administered by the State, and the what the policies and procedures are for determining when the child is eligible to be counted under the 89-313 program. Most importantly, the study will look at the policies and procedures governing the placement of handicapped children including where these children reside, where they receive their education, and the policies and procedures for transferring children from State-operated facilities into LEA's.

In particular, I am concerned that all severely handicapped students are not being served in an appropriate integrated educational environment. While the majority of school systems around the country integrate their severely handicapped children with nonhandicapped students, there are too many children who are segregated for no valid educational reason. This conference report, particularly the GAO study, will give the Congress the information it needs to make the necessary changes so that severely handicapped children have the opportunity to be educated with their nonhandicapped peers.

In the Bilingual Education Program, H.R. 5 modernizes and strenghthens the provisions which enable students to achieve full competence in English and to meet school grade promotion and graduation requirements. H.R. 5 provides that the Secretary of Education may reserve up to 25 percent of the funds appropriated under part A for grants for special alternative instructional programs. The 75-percent setaside for part A funds is not changed. This reflects the support by the conferees and myself of both teaching methods: the transitional bilingual method and special alternative methods.

The need to improve and expand bilingual education programs is particularly critical at this time due to the increasing number of non-English-speaking students entering our educational system. I believe these changes protect the current programs under part A while providing the Secretary greater flexibility in funding alternative methods of instruction. I support these changes and believe it will allow local school districts the flexibility they need to teach their limited English proficient students.

Finally, H.R. 5 makes significant improvements in the National Assessment for Educational Improvement which measures the academic performance of our students. This conference report expands the subject areas to be assessed and provides for two trial State assessments in math and science in 1990 and 1992. The conference report eliminates the controversial State-by-State comparison of State and local school systems. The subject areas in NAEP are expanded to include science, history, and geography. Currently only mathematics, reading, and writing are the learning areas which are assessed. In addition, H.R. 5 establishes an independent National Assessment Board which will set the policy for the National Assessment, develop objectives for assessing learning areas, and determine how to report the results fairly and accurately.

These improvements in the national assessment will provide more reliable and accurate data on student academic performance so that policymakers at the national, State, and local levels as well as educators and the public can better monitor the effectiveness of American education.

I commend the chairman, Mr. HAWKINS and my colleagues Congressman JEFFORDS and Congressman GOODLING for their hard work on this comprehensive education and their dedication to maintaining excellence in our public schools. H.R. 5 reflects their commitment to provide the best education possible to all of our young people.

I support this conference report and believe it will have a beneficial effect on education for many years to come.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 45 seconds to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BILBRAY].

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the conferees on a fine job. I believe this bill has been shaped by a unique understanding of where we have been over the past two decades with respect to education and the foresight to increase the depth and breadth of education throughout our society in order to meet the increasing challenges that the 21st century will offer us.

The conference report on the School Improvement Act presents each one of us the opportunity to take back to our districts innovative and realistic goals for the enhancement of education across all ages and segments of society.

Only the educated are truly free: Free to understand a driving test and attain their driver's license; free to attain the needed criteria to enter a career of their choice; but most importantly, free to live a life outside the shadows of ignorance.

Twenty-four centuries ago Plato made a statement that holds true today and which requires us to pass this report and ultimately the School Improvement Act:

> The direction in which education starts a man, will determine his future life.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I rise in strong support of the conference report to H.R. 5, legislation to improve elementary and secondary education. I commend the committee's distinguished chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], and I would, as ranking minority member of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, like to focus my colleagues attention on title V of this legislation.

This section of the bill reauthorizes the Drug Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986, a most important act initially created by the Omnibus Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986. This landmark legislation, for the first time, gave the Federal Government the necessary leadership in the area of drug abuse prevention education efforts. Recognizing that the epidemic of drug abuse and narcotics trafficking throughout this country is one rooted in demand as well as supply, all efforts must be brought to bear to raise a generation that is aware of the dangers of illicit substance abuse. Title V, therefore, reauthorizes the Drug Free Schools and Communities Act for fiscal years 1989-93, and authorizes $250 million for fiscal year 1989 and such sums as may be necessary for the out years.

Funding is made available to the States, to local school districts, as well as to community organizations, for the purpose of providing drug abuse prevention, early intervention, and rehabilitation referral programs to elementary and secondary school-age students. Moreover, funds are allocated to community organizations targeting their substance abuse prevention efforts to school dropouts, and other high risk youth. Special consideration has been given at this time to the addition of youth suicide prevention programs to the jurisdiction of this act, which I fully support and which I hope will further stem the rising tragedy of teenage suicides that have plagued our urban areas in recent years.

Funding is also authorized for programs offered by institutions of higher learning, and each State receives a share of the funding for its own efforts above and beyond those developed by local schools and community organizations.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot emphasize strongly enough the need for this important act's reauthorization. The scourge of drug abuse knows no societal or geographic bounds. Too many have already succumbed to the death and misery that is drug addiction. Yet by providing comprehensive drug abuse education programs in our schools and communities, we can hope to rescue a generation of youngsters from the clutches of the narcotics traffickers. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support the conference report accompanying H.R. 5.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUSTAMANTE].

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding time to me, and I also want to thank him for his support to provide adequate funding for coterminous school districts.

I would like to use this time to address the distinguished chairman of Education and Labor Committee, Chairman HAWKINS.

Mr. Chairman, as a Member representing several of the impact-aid-recipient local school districts known as coterminous—that is, with boundaries the same as the military reservation they serve and with no local tax base—I rise out of concern for the treatment of these districts in H.R. 5.

As you know, the insufficiency of Federal impact aid funding for these districts led several of us to seek new language in H.R. 5 specifying that the local contribution rate for these coterminous districts be not less than 70 percent of the national average per pupil expenditure.

While this language, which came from the Senate amendment, was approved by conferees, a new limitation was added that the recipient district's per pupil expenditure could not rise above the average of all districts for its State.

I originally interpreted the language quite differently to mean that impact aid payments to coterminous districts would not exceed the State's per pupil expenditure.

After closer examination, this clause has the effect of negating the intent of position I attempted to represent.

The three coterminous districts in Texas already expend more per student than the State average for a variety of valid reasons arising from their unique characteristics. Ironically, the new coterminous agency rule in the impact aid reauthorization cuts rather than raises existing funding levels for these districts.

I was relieved to note that a final clause was added to the conterminous agency provision to ensure that their funding would not be allowed to fall below 50 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in all 50 States. Is it the gentleman's understanding that this clause applies to all coterminous districts?

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, may I say to the gentleman the answer is yes, that is my understanding.

Mr. BUSTAMANTE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gracious understanding of the chairman. At least this will offer some small measure of security until we can again seek to assure that these districts receive the adequate funding they deserve.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of the original House bill, H.R. 5, I rise in strong support of the conference report on the Augustus F. Hawkins and Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary Education Amendments of 1988.

This legislation extends through 1993 almost every Federal elementary and secondary education program. The centerpiece of this legislation is the reauthorization of chapter 1 compensatory education programs for educationally disadvantaged children. This bill requires a better targeting of services to low-income students, and would require school districts to show progress in teaching disadvantaged students. In addition, a one-time appropriation is authorized to help school districts provide compensatory education services to children in private schools. This measure also strengthens methods for service delivery, expands access to more eligible students, and provides for more parental involvement in local chapter 1 programs.

In addition to the important changes in the chapter 1 program, this bill makes several changes in other education programs. The Federal commitment to science and math education is strengthened, the Education Block Grant Program is streamlined to more sharply focus the uses of Federal education funds, the national assessment of educational progress is expanded to include additional areas of testing, the Impact Aid Program is substantially revised in order to simplify the number of categories of eligible children and the payment rates for those children, and additional flexibility is given local school districts to determine the method of instruction in the bilingual education program.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is landmark legislation and as such it is fitting that it is named for the distinguished chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, GUS HAWKINS. Chairman HAWKINS' leadership has been vital to maintaining and strengthening the Federal commitment to quality education programs.

I urge a vote in favor of the conference report.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Hawaii [Mr. AKAKA].

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

On behalf of native Hawaiians I want to thank my colleagues for providing the necessary authority to address their dire educational status.

Mr. Speaker, today I rise to express my strong support for the conference report on the bill, H.R. 5. I would like to commend the members of the conference committee, especially Congressman KILDEE and Congressman WILLIAMS, and their staff, for the excellent work they have done in fashioning a bill that thoroughly addresses the educational needs of our youth.

This measure is a matter of extreme importance to all who support the fulfillment of human potential.

In particular, it is about a problem that has gnawed at our country for longer than any of us would be inclined to admit; the severe educational status of our Nation's native Hawaiian population.

That persons of native Hawaiian ancestry have suffered disproportionately from educational inequity for some time has been clearly documented. Congress has studied the issue, as have the State of Hawaii's local educational institutions; and, each time the results have been the same. Overall, native Hawaiians score below parity with national norms on standardized achievement tests. They continue to score well below national norms in achievement of basic skills. An estimated 37 percent, for example, of Hawaiian elementary students register in the lowest scoring groups, compared with a meager 12 percent in the uppermost groups—versus 23 percent nationally.

H.R. 5 takes a valuable step in the direction of addressing the dire educational needs of native Hawaiians. It focuses the attention of Congress and the Federal Government on the special needs of this native group for the first time in the history of education.

It is with the gracious support of those who are sensitive to the needs of native Hawaiians that this measure has come to fruition; a measure that is comprehensive, prudent, innovative and most importantly, responsive. I urge my colleagues support for its speedy approval.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when our Nation's competitive power is on the decline, our attention should be focused on strengthening our domestic base. Surely, our people can compete only if they have been provided with the means to achieve. A sound education is perhaps the most fundamental tool that America can offer its citizens. Native Hawaiians, as citizens of this great Nation, are in desperate need of that tool; and, Congress is prepared to place it in their hands.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it was nearly 1 year ago that the Education and Labor Committee brought H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act, to the House floor. The House approved that version of H.R. 5 by a vote of 401 to 1. Subsequently, the Senate and House have met in conference on this important education legislation and worked out their differences. The resulting legislation is not significantly different from the original House-passed bill and, in fact, has been improved and strengthened by the hard work of House and Senate conferees.

Let me point out a few of the significant provisions of H.R. 5. First of all, I am pleased that this major piece of legislation now bears the name of our chairman, Mr. HAWKINS of California. The Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988 is a fine and fitting tribute to the dedication he has shown in improving the educational opportunities for all children. Under the leadership of Mr. HAWKINS, the Education and Labor Committee and the House of Representatives have produced a bill they can be proud of. I am also pleased that the conferees chose to recognize the contributions of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. STAFFORD] by joining his name with Mr. HAWKINS.

The House and Senate conferees wrestled with a difficult problem in attempting to create a mechanism for program improvement in chapter 1 while maintaining educational decisionmaking at the local level. I believe that the program improvement section of this bill maintains this balance.

During the conference on H.R. 5, the Senate accepted the House provision creating a small State minimum in the basic grants portion of chapter 1. When this funding provision takes effect, it will ensure that the smallest States will receive a chapter 1 grant adequate to continue providing services of high quality despite relatively small student populations. The minimum grant was constructed so that no small State will receive a windfall payment, other States will not be adversely affected relative to their current grant, and the chapter 1 program must show substantial growth before the provision takes effect.

Rural States such as Vermont face unique and difficult problems in providing their students with a high-quality education as a result of small numbers of students, isolation from resources, and conditions that are quite different from the typical urban-suburban school setting. I was pleased that the House accepted the Senate provision creating new rural education assistance centers as part of chapter 1. These centers will help rural schools improve their chapter 1 programs and provide increased opportunities to their students.

I am pleased that the conference report for H.R. 5 contains the provisions, originally adopted by the House, for the chapter 1 Handicapped Program. These provisions make four improvements in this program: First, the provisions clarify and simplify administrative requirements; second, they increase the legislation's compatibility with the Education of All Handicapped Children's Act; third, suggested uses for funds should facilitate the quality of educational opportunities for participating students; and finally, the provisions call for a GAO study which will tell us more about this program.

H.R. 5 establishes a new educational program aimed at preventing students from dropping out of school. The high rate of dropping out is a problem in Vermont and across the country. In the 99th Congress, I worked with the original sponsors of this legislation to guarantee that funds made available under this program would go to rural and urban areas on an equitable basis. The funding provisions in the legislation we are considering today reflect my original concerns and provide a fair share of funds to small schools.

In closing, there are many other programs worth noting in H.R. 5—such as Mr. GOODLING's Even Start Program—but I will not take the time to elaborate further. H.R. 5, as contained in this conference report, represents good educational policy for my State of Vermont and good policy for the Nation. I recommend H.R. 5 to my colleagues and urge them to support its passage today.

Mr. Speaker, this concludes our eloquent testimony to the Augustus F. Hawkins-Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my full support for the conference report on H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act. As New York's ranking member on the House Education and Labor Committee I am proud to be a cosponsor of what is clearly the most significant measure affecting elementary and secondary education to be considered this decade.

This conference agreement reauthorizes through fiscal year 1993 nearly all major Federal elementary, secondary and adult education programs. These programs include chapter 1—the largest Federal aid program to elementary and secondary schools; chapter 2 education block grants; adult education; bilingual education; and impact aid.

I am particularly pleased that the agreement authorizes a major new Federal grant program for gifted and talented children. I was proud to have authored the provisions establishing this grant program, which is a critical component of our overall effort to raise the level of America's competitiveness in the world marketplace. Clearly, if our Nation is to regain its competitive edge we must work to better fulfill the vast potential of our schoolchildren. The greatest potential of all lies with our Nation's gifted and talented students. Unfortunately, though, these same students are also some of our most neglected.

Gifted children are intellectually advanced, creative people, who possess great curiosity. Often, however, these children are bored or unresponsive, have poor grades or may become disciplinary problems as schools fail to provide the attention and resources gifted and talented children need to fulfill their potential. This conference agreement would respond effectively to this very serious deficiency in our educational system by authorizing $20 million in fiscal year 1989 and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal years 1990 through 1993 for a new program of grants to States, school districts, institutions of higher education, and other private and public agencies to support programs that identify and meet the needs of gifted and talented students.

This is in stark contrast to the fact that we are presently spending less than $5 per child in Federal funds to support the approximately 2 million brightest and most promising of our Nation's students. The results of this serious neglect were reported by the National Commission on Excellence in Education in a study entitled "A Nation At Risk." The report noted that "over half of the gifted students do not match their tested ability with comparable achievement in school" and that "both the number and proportion of students demonstrating superior achievement in the scholastic aptitude test have also dramatically declined." Their recommendation—"the Federal Government, in cooperation with States and localities should help meet the needs of key groups of students such as the gifted and talented"—is now being acted upon, and it's about time.

Another key provision in the conference agreement, which I was also proud to author, creates workplace literacy partnership grants designed to improve employees' productivity by improving their literacy skills. This grant program is authorized at $30 million in fiscal 1988, $31.5 million in 1989 and such sums as necessary thereafter.

These funds will support adult education programs which teach literacy skills needed in the workplace. Activities will be supported that assist in the completion of a high school diploma or its equivalent; help meet the literacy needs of adults with limited English proficiency; improve the competency of adult workers in speaking, listening, reasoning, or problem solving; and provide education counseling.

The need for such a program is overwhelming. Quite simply, this Nation is facing perhaps the most severe trade crisis in our history. Yet I believe we have been losing sight of the most important factor in influencing America's competitive posture in world trade—the education of our citizens. We must provide services to our workers so they can function effectively within a rapidly changing economy and who can adapt to the everchanging environment of the workplace.

Simply consider this very telling fact. According to a recent study by the National Assessment of Educational Progress, 43 percent of persons ages 21 through 25 are unable to perform at a level sufficient to master multistep directions, communicate ideas and directions to other workers, or calculate at a level needed for high technology occupations. The workplace literacy grant program contained in this conference agreement will help to correct this very serious problem.

There are many other important provisions in this agreement, most notably the reauthorization of the chapter 1 compensatory education program, which seeks to meet the special educational needs of low-income and disadvantaged children. Central to the chapter 1 reauthorization is the concentration grant provision, which will focus additional resources and services on those areas most in need. Special efforts were made to ensure that these concentration grants are distributed equitably among the States.

Other provisions that I believe merit special attention are those providing for impact aid and bilingual education, both of which are vitally important to my home State of New York. I am also very pleased with the new Dropout Prevention and Reentry Program authorized under this agreement. The agreement specifically provides for $50 million to fund demonstration projects on ways to prevent students from dropping out of school and to encourage those who have dropped out to return and finish school. The dropout problem has long plagued New York City schools and this has been a special concern to me. I am pleased to note that this grant program places a special emphasis on areas with a high dropout rate. I want to commend my good friend from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] for his exemplary leadership in this matter.

There is perhaps no greater threat to the future of our great Nation than drug abuse and this legislation recognizes that fact. The agreement extends the authorization for the drug abuse education programs of the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986. It authorizes $250 million in fiscal year 1989 and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal years 1990 through 1993 for drug and alcohol education, prevention and early intervention programs.

Mr. Speaker, we can all be very proud of the legislative product before us today. We are making a very substantial investment in the future of our country—an investment that should yield a very high rate of return. I wish to close by commending the distinguished chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, Mr. HAWKINS, and the ranking minority member of the Elementary, Secondary and Vocational Education Subcommittee, Mr. GOODLING, for their outstanding leadership in crafting this vital piece of legislation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in support of the conference agreement on H.R. 5. I want to commend Chairman HAWKINS and distinguished Members of both sides of the aisle for the excellent job they have done on the School Improvement Act.

H.R. 5 renews support for important Federal elementary and secondary education programs, including key programs such as chapter I, math and science, bilingual education and Indian education. This bill embodies our Nation's commitment to meet the needs of our youth and adult students, offering them a chance to build their skills and self-esteem.

Carefully crafted to address economic and social changes, H.R. 5 will help ensure that all our citizens have access to a quality education. This legislation is designed to meet the special needs of low-achieving, economically disadvantaged students and helps redistribute funds to poor rural areas that often get the short end of the stick. Many school districts in Colorado will benefit from these provisions.

Education is an investment in our future. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, over the past year 500,000 young people have attempted to take their own lives. Tragically, 5,000 have succeeded. These youngsters have slipped away from us. They have become a cruel reminder of our failure to communicate, listen, and help. A new chapter 2 provision, included in H.R. 5, provides a small, but significant step to assist in fighting the No. 3 killer of our young.

This new section provides a successful battle plan in the fight against youth suicide. It was included in H.R. 5 in recognition of strong bipartisan support of legislation introduced earlier this year by myself, Mr. LANTOS, Mr. DIOGUARDI, and Mr. KILDEE—H.R. 457, the Young Suicide Prevention Act. A bill identical to H.R. 457 passed the House in July 1986.

At this time, I want to express my sincere appreciation to Chairman HAWKINS for his commitment and leadership on the issue of youth suicide, and for ensuring that the youth suicide prevention program was included in the final version of H.R. 5.

The youth suicide prevention provision authorizes chapter 2 funds for school-based suicide prevention programs. It is my strong desire that the Secretary of Education identify exemplary programs, and disseminate information regarding those programs to interested school districts and nonprofit organizations.

I strongly believe that, in its entirety, H.R. 5 provides the education that our youngsters need, and the youth suicide prevention provision enables our kids to live to enjoy the fruits of their education.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the conference report on H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act. The programs in H.R. 5 go a long way toward meeting the educational needs of our Nation's youth.

The school improvement act is particularly significant because of increased authorizations for basic skills programs in high schools.

I am pleased that the conference report includes funding for secondary schools basic skills programs. Until now, high schools have not received the Federal support needed to teach the fundamentals to disadvantaged students. The legislation creates a program specifically designed to meet the needs of high school students.

At the same time, as agreed to by the conferees, funding will be closer to the realistic funding needs originally envisioned by my legislation.

Together with Congressman PAT WILLIAMS, I authored the Secondary Schools Basic Skills Act. The act targets Federal support at high schools. Today, few of the available chapter 1 funds go to high schools. Only 12 percent of the available funds go to high schools.

But without those critical funds, needy and disadvantaged high school students have not been and cannot be fully served.

Today, half of all educationally disadvantaged high school students do not have access to basic skills programs. And yet these programs could help overcome their learning needs.

The funding gap has created an education gap in high schools. More students graduate into the real and cruel world of functional illiteracy. Throughout the Nation, one-sixth of all 17-year-olds lack needed basic skills. These are the basic skills necessary to complete a job application. These are the basic skills necessary to add two and two together.

In every district, in every State, the needs of high school students are urgent. In New Jersey, only one-third of college freshmen demonstrated proficiency in verbal skills and math. Only 12 percent passed the algebra test.

The need for basic skills programs in high schools is obvious.

I am pleased by the recognition given to education as a priority. I am also pleased to have played a role in improving access to educational opportunities for high school students.

Graduating high school students with basic skills is the difference between success and failure. Our society cannot afford to neglect these students anymore. Our society should afford to help them achieve and succeed.

Once again, I urge my colleagues to vote for the conference report on H.R. 5. This bill will help decide whether our Nation's youth fail or pass with flying colors.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference agreement on H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act, which extends and revises many of our most important Federal elementary and secondary education programs.

The cornerstone of the legislation is chapter 1, Compensatory Education for Disadvantaged Children, which assures children who are educationally disadvantaged with equal access to education services. Chapter 1 has made great strides in raising the academic achievement levels of students. A study commissioned by the U.S. Department of Education found that chapter 1 students gained 7 to 12 months in reading and 11 to 12 months in math for every year they participated in the program—a significantly higher gain than in a control group.

Chapter 1 saves money too. An investment of $750 in compensatory education, can save the $3,700 cost of repeating a grade. Yet 50 percent of educationally disadvantaged children still do not receive chapter 1 services under the LEA Basic Grant Program. While wise investments should be a priority during this period of fiscal constraint, the administration proposed increasing financial assistance to school districts by a mere 5 percent, barely covering inflation.

Other improvements include a set-aside in the Chapter 1 Basic Grant Program for concentration grants to school districts with an exceptionally high number of poor children. As the select committee has documented, with an increase just since 1979 of almost 3 million more children in poverty who are at educational and social risk, such action is critical.

This provision also reflects the findings of a report of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. They found that the Nation's urban schools are failing to improve educational outcomes for disadvantaged inner-city children because of a lack of money. The foundation recommended that Federal aid for schools having large numbers of poor children be increased so that all eligible children could be served. By including such an increase in the legislation we are considering today, Southern and rural schools which have large percentages of poor children would also be able to significantly benefit from these concentration grants.

The Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families has documented in a new report, "Opportunities for Success: Cost Effective Programs for Children, Update, 1988," that significant savings accrue in human potential as well as in dollars when investments are made in successful early intervention programs such as those authorized in this legislation.

In 1987, distinguished business leaders in the Committee for Economic Development reaffirmed the select committee's findings when they endored a massive public and private investment in early childhood education, citing it as essential to creating a technologically skilled work force for the 21st century.

The act establishes two new programs which carry out these principles: the Even Start Program to assist parental involvement in their children's education and to provide early childhood education for their children; and Comprehensive Child Development Centers to provide an array of family centered preventive and early intervention services beginning prenatally and assisting high risk, vulnerable children until they become school age.

The Even Start Act extends chapter 1 services to young children ages 1 to 7 and their parents by integrating basic adult education for parents with early childhood development for their children. Perhaps no service is more critical to averting costly special education services, or to preventing crime, unemployment, and welfare dependency in adulthood, than early educational opportunities. For every dollar invested in quality preschool education, $6 is returned because of lower costs of special education, public assistance and crime. As a result of this new program, not only will children be better prepared to enter school, parental guidance and self-sufficiency will be fostered.

I want to bring particular attention to the provision in the bill that supports Comprehensive Child Development Centers to provide intensive and comprehensive supportive services to infants and young children from low-income families. This legislation builds on the Chicago-based "Beethoven Project," conceived by philanthropist and businessman, Irving Harris, which is providing critical intervention services from cradle to kindergarten for high risk mothers and their infants. The program represents not only an effort to extend comprehensive and intensive services to often very isolate and precarious families, but also a significant effort to rethink how those services should be delivered.

The legislation also maintains and strengthens the important Bilingual Education Act, which has proved critical to ensuring the academic success of non-English speaking students. As the select committee learned, culturally appropriate curricula can mean the difference between success in school or eventually dropping out. This program especially benefits Hispanic youth who are of special concern because their high school dropout rate is high—in 1985, 37 percent Hispanic 18 to 24 year olds had not graduated from high school. A recent study of 483 public high schools in 100 school districts in metropolitan Los Angeles revealed that Hispanic students, who comprise over one-third of the public school age population in Los Angeles County, lagged far behind white students in reading, writing, and math skills. Hispanic youth also face increasing poverty and limited employment opportunities at a higher rate than any other group.

National concern about the high incidence of drug and alcohol abuse among the Nation's youth is also addressed in this bill through the establishment of drug education programs. Given the increasing use of cocaine among teenagers, such efforts are especially timely and build on work begun by the last Congress to ameliorate the growing drug problem.

Another provision will fund innovative efforts to prevent students from dropping out of school. As many as 25 percent of the Nation's youth may never finish high school. In some communities this percentage may be as high as 50 percent. Without a high school education, few will be able to compete in the new, high-technology centered labor market. Dropout prevention programs are essential to help at-risk students stay in school, obtain critical training and obtain employment which will be adequate to support a family and prevent the cycle from starting over again with a new generation of children.

This legislation makes tremendous strides by fostering educational equity for handicapped students, female students, and high-risk disadvantaged students through a continuum of services from preschool to high school. A new Federal program, long overdue, creates a program to identify and meet the needs of gifted and talented children as well, such as those which now serve gifted and talented students in my district of Contra Costa County. I am delighted that Federal efforts will permit replication of similar programs nationwide.

I am particularly pleased that the conference agreement safeguards children against dial-a-porn—telephone pornography which can be accessed by simply dialing a code number. Along with my colleague from California, Ms. BOXER, I have been working with telephone companies to address the problem of child access. The conference agreement, agreed to by six of seven regional companies and a number of long distance carriers, provides an essential remedy.

The agreement addresses this controversial constitutional question in a reasonable fashion by making dial-a-porn a subscription service. Access to telephone pornography would be blocked to households unless the service is specifically requested by an adult. Both children and the constitutional right to free speech are protected.

Chairman HAWKINS and the members of the conference committee on H.R. 5 are to be commended for reaching agreements in a timely fashion and for instituting important reforms. I urge my colleagues to support their efforts by supporting this legislation.

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, as we prepare to vote on H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act, we should remember that the generation of children now entering kindergarten will be the first to graduate from high school in the 21st century. It is vital that we act today to begin the process of laying a foundation to ensure that our school children receive the best education in the world.

I have no doubt that this bill is one of the most important we will consider this year. Providing a world class education for our young people must be one of our highest national priorities. This legislation will make a significant contribution toward improving the quality of education in our public schools.

This bill will provide much needed funding for a number of important programs. Particularly important are the funds targeted for areas with a high concentration of poor children. It is vital that we do a better job of educating the less affluent children in our society. It will be impossible for these children to get meaningful work in the work place of the future if they do not have adequate skills. Further, we, as a society, cannot hope to compete with other nations with literacy rates of nearly 100 percent when fully 20 percent of our population is functionally illiterate. It is among the poor that we have traditionally seen the highest rates of illiteracy.

Also important are the funds earmarked for mathematics and science education. It is vital that we increase the number of scientists and engineers we produce in this country. We will not long remain the world's pre-eminent economic power if we do not address the serious shortfall in these programs. We must reverse the situation which last year saw more foreign students than American students graduate from our universities with engineering degrees.

It is impossible to overstate the importance of this legislation. The quality of the education we provide to our young people will not only determine the quality of the life they lead when they enter the work force but will, in large measure, determine the ability of this country to effectively compete in the high technology world of the future.

As important as this bill is, it is only a first step in making the kind of fundamental changes necessary in our education system needed to prepare our young people for the 1990's and beyond. We cannot afford to stop here.

It is absolutely critical that we do a better job of educating the less affluent children in our society. America cannot prosper if we do not effectively address the problem of a poorly educated underclass which lacks the skills necessary to obtain and hold a decent job. This means we must develop new programs specifically targeted to poor children, particularly of preschool age.

We must also improve the quality of the math and science education our children receive. An understanding of mathematics and science will be critical to success in the future.

Improving the quality of education will also require increasing the amount of time our children spend in their classrooms. We cannot expect our children to compete with Asian children or European children who spend 25 percent more time in their classrooms. Today, a Japanese high school student has received the equivalent of 3 additional years of education when compared to American students. This means that by the time they graduate from high school they are the equivalent of college juniors in this country. Unless we address this imbalance in classroom time, American students will continue to fall further behind their international counterparts.

We also need to improve the way in which our schools use the resources they already have. This means that our schools must use the funds they have more efficiently. There is no question we should get a bigger bang for our education buck. Even though the Japanese spend less than we do on educating their children, they have a longer school year, have a nearly 100-percent literacy rate, pay their teachers more than we do, and are able to give their children the finest education in the world. Maximizing the funds already earmarked for education will allow us to spend new funds in the areas in which they are most needed.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting final passage of this important legislation. With its passage we are making an important investment in the future of education in this country.

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, today the House is considering a landmark piece of legislation—the conference agreement on H.R. 5 the School Improvement Act. After months of redrafting, this $7.5 billion comprehensive education package is replete with both House and Senate improvements.

H.R. 5 strengthens the Federal Government's commitment to primary and secondary education. Although the Federal Government plays a support role in public education, Federal programs are absolutely vital to the strength of local school systems. These programs will be reauthorized through fiscal year 1993.

The changes marked in H.R. 5 are improvements that make education more accessible in a variety of ways. This is best illustrated in the new provisions for chapter 1 compensatory education. Chapter 1 was designed to give disadvantaged students the opportunity to succeed in school; the new changes are designed to better assist schools in achieving this goal.

Included in chapter 1 is the new initiative Even Start to target parental involvement and adult literacy. It is a boost to our secondary schools in the form of dropout prevention and basic skills improvement. It promises a brighter future for the Sixth Congressional District of South Carolina where barely 50 percent of the adult population have high school diplomas.

A new funding requirement for chapter 1 favors counties with more than 6,500 low-income children, or with more than 15 percent of their schoolage children from low-income families. This provision alone has the potential to increase the quality of education in each county of the Sixth District.

Other provisions of H.R. 5 should be noted. The chapter 2 block grant which maintains over 30 different types of programs reaching every public school in the Nation is reauthorized.

The impact aid program has been improved by a more coordinated system of payment to affected school districts from the Departments of Education and Defense. Drug abuse education, mathematics and science education, bilingual education, magnet schools, and emergency immigrant education and a host of other programs are authorized in this legislation.

South Carolina's recent efforts to raise the overall level of education for its citizens is well known throughout the country. The Federal Government has played a key role in this success. The Education Improvement Act ensures continued progress because it addresses the fundamental idea that the future prosperity of our State and Nation depends on the educational success of individual citizens.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Speaker, I am opposing the rule today because the conferees ignored the instructions of the House majority and did not include in the conference agreement the Senate-passed language prohibiting dial-a-porn. My colleagues and I voted 274 to 17 to adopt Senator HELMS' amendment to ban this abhorrence entirely. I regret that the conferees chose to disregard our clear message that we will no longer stand for the filth that is being transmitted to our children.

Pornography cannot be tolerated in any form. Dial-a-porn is operated by those who would, to earn the almighty dollar, abuse and plunder the minds of our young people. It is indiscriminate; it is wrong; it is an outrage to public decency. My constituents are among the majority of Americans who will not tolerate it any longer—nor will I.

If Senator HELMS' bill is unconstitutional, that is for the courts to decide. Today, we in Congress are expressing community standards as they apply to the sordid business of dial-a-porn. This is a step that must be taken to protect the decency of America—let the porn kings take their case to court.

As a father of three young children and the spouse of a child psychiatrist, I fully support legislation that will protect our children and our families. We need more education on responsible sexual behavior—not free access to pornographic messages. Our children are faced daily with moral dilemmas in today's world; this is one instance that we can help eliminate.

As Members of Congress we need to send a strong message that we will no longer stand for these obscene and indecent operations. Dial-a-porn lines must be permanently disconnected. I urge my colleagues to defeat the previous question on the rule.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act of 1987. I voted in favor of this measure the first time it was considered and urge my colleagues to join me in doing so again today. The bill renews and expands Federal programs affecting most of the Nation's elementary and secondary schoolchildren. It is the most comprehensive elementary and secondary education authorization legislation the Congress has considered since 1978 and is a bill for the times. It confronts head on the most critical issues in education today.

The cornerstone of H.R. 5 is the program known as chapter 1 which provides supplementary, compensatory services for educationally disadvantaged children. The largest Federal elementary and secondary program, and one that study after study has validated as being effective, chapter 1 supports special programs that improve the achievement of educationally deprived children living in poor areas. H.R. 5 expands this worthy program by providing more funding for basic skills education at the critical preschool and secondary school level. Furthermore, the bill strengthens the role of parents in their children's education, and holds schools more accountable for the quality of their chapter 1 instructional programs.

In addition, I strongly support the language regulating dial-a-porn telephone services. My interest and concern about the pornography issue in general go back to my service in the California State Senate where I was one of the leaders in the fight against pornography, especially child pornography. I am deeply concerned about this growing epidemic and believe that the regulation of dial-a-porn operations is an important first step.

I want to commend my colleagues on the conference committee who worked hard in putting this report together. I think it is a good one and urge passage immediately.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act of 1987. I also want to thank Chairman HAWKINS for the opportunity to address this important legislation.

Education has played a vital role in the building of this great Nation. The recent debate about the quality of our educational product, and thereby our ability to compete in the international marketplace, has received considerable national attention. H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act of 1987, provides one opportunity for us to respond positively to some critical shortcomings in our educational system.

Faced with the challenge of a generation marked for failure, H.R. 5 has far-reaching implications for the United States. By extending and strengthening most of the Federal elementary, secondary, and adult education programs, this bill provides needed support at all ascending levels of our educational system. H.R. 5 focuses on key elements of reform recommended by leading educational experts. This effort reaffirms the Congress' commitment to excellence in education as a top national priority.

Mr. Speaker, I again commend Chairman HAWKINS and his committee for the development of this initiative. Our support of this measure is an indication of our commitment and concern about the survival and quality of our children and youth—the single most important determinants of the quality of the national and world future. I urge my colleagues to take this opportunity to recommit themselves to a better and brighter America. We owe it to ourselves; and to our future generations.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 5, the Augustus F. Hawkins and Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988. The bill authorizes major Federal elementary and secondary education programs through fiscal year 1993. These programs include chapter 1 compensatory education, chapter 2 education block grants, bilingual education, adult education, Indian education, and impact aid. The chapter 1 program has been amended to authorize additional funds to school districts with high concentrations of poor children, to expand the teaching of basic skills in high schools and to prevent dropouts.

In sum, I believe H.R. 5 demonstrates the Congress' commitment to correcting the most serious problems in our country's education system. By working hard to draw young people from the streets back to the classroom, this bill helps to solve many problems. It is the poor and troubled children and teenagers in America who desperately need an improved education system. The bill also authorizes funds for gifted and talented students, foreign language training, and star schools, which emphasize math and science.

Chairman HAWKINS and Senator STAFFORD deserve a great deal of praise for their work on H.R. 5. By their hard work, they have crafted a bill that will benefit millions of Americans. Thank you.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report to the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, and to commend my colleague, Congressman GUS HAWKINS of California, for his hard work and the intelligent negotiations he conducted to ensure that this critically important bill would come before us today.

The Federal share of education spending in our Nation is insignificant in numbers—$20 million in Federal funding compared to the close to $300 billion spent by States, local jurisdictions, and individuals. It is a small percent, but it is critical funding because Federal programs both leverge local spending and address problem areas where there are few resources available.

The chapter 1 funds for disadvantaged children target those elementary and secondary students most in need of a helping hand to make sure that they can achieve to their highest level of academic ability. Chapter 2 funds, allocated by State student populations, give flexibility to those closest to the schools for programs which can best benefit the locality, whether the program is in teacher training and retraining or in curriculum reform which updates materials and classes to prepare students for the world of the 21st century.

I'm pleased and grateful that the Senate adopted and the House concurred in a provision which initially was part of a youth suicide prevention bill I have cosponsored over the last several years. This provision will allow States flexibility to focus on immediate needs in the schools, and for some school districts, that need may be to address the ever increasing problem of youth suicide. The bill does not require any particular programs nor does it mandate a program. However, it does allow for school administrators and school boards to consult with the State educational agency to determine priorities which can include addressing problem which is taking the lives of thousands of young people in our Nation today. Whether a State wants to put in place a central response team to be made available to local districts when particular series or events involving youth suicide occurs in their area, or whether a program of teacher training includes a section on the signs and signals of troubled youth is to be decided by State and local jurisdictions. The Federal Government does not dictate programs nor does it encourage States to identify and begin to solve problems in any particular way. It does allow State and local jurisdictions to make their own decisions, within a set series of allowable programs, to make our schools better, to train our teachers to continue to improve and to be the best, and to treat our children as students who can achieve, and as young people who have a future full of hope.

Again, I commend Chairman HAWKINS for his fine work and express my appreciation for both his commitment, his emotion, and his legislative accomplishment in this bill.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, as the conference report to H.R. 5 is now being considered by the House, I wish to comment on two foreign language provisions contained in the act. The first restores a provision for the Critical Foreign Languages Program in the Secretary's discretionary fund of the Department of Education, while the second establishes Presidential awards for excellence in the teaching of foreign languages. These provisions were added to H.R. 5 in amendments added when the bill was first considered by the House last May. At that time, I was very pleased to be joined by my distinguished colleague, Mr. SAWYER, in introducing the first amendment, and to have had your support, that of Mr. GOODLING, and finally that of the House and Senate for both measures.

In addition, I am very pleased that the final version of H.R. 5 includes a program of "model foreign language" grants, which you authored, that is similar to a provision from H.R. 1875, the International Education for a Competitive American Act, that I introduced in 1987. While model a foreign language program nearly identical to that of H.R. 1875 is included in the Senate version of H.R. 3, I am delighted that you wrote this provision and that it is now a part of the School Improvement Act.

The Critical Foreign Language Program of the Secretary's discretionary fund is a small but important component of the Federal Government's involvement in the foreign language education at the elementary and secondary levels. For the past 3 years, this program has been allocated $2 million each year, mostly for grants to fund a total of 70 foreign language programs at the elementary and secondary levels.

The types of programs funded are those that are superior in and of themselves are good models, mostly in the areas of teacher training and curriculum development for "critical foreign languages." this category officially includes a total of over 100 languages, though there is a narrower category of the 11 most critical, and a large portion of the programs are actually in just three languages: Chinese, Japanese, and Arabic. There is a concentration on these three because, among those languages critical to our national security and economic prosperity, there is a special need for programs in these three. Most of the programs to date have been cooperative ventures between local schools and institutions of higher education. In addition, some money has gone directly to State education associations to aid in the development of statewide plans for foreign language curriculums.

The Critical Languages Program has become one of the most effective among those funded by the Secretary's discretionary fund, and, as I mentioned, one of the best foreign language programs at the Federal level. However, historically, nearly all the money in the discretionary fund not specifically earmarked for foreign languages has been used to meet pressing math and science needs. This is the reason that Representative SAWYER and myself authored the amendment restoring a specific designation for foreign languages in the discretionary fund that was originally to have been deleted in H.R. 5. The Critical Foreign Languages Program of the Secretary's discretionary fund is much more valuable than its small funding level of approximately $2 million would suggest. It is the only part of title II specifically earmarked for foreign languages, and departmental staff have ensured that these funds are used for innovative and solid programs. Eliminating critical foreign languages from the discretionary fund would mean that, in reality, little or no title II money would go toward foreign languages, and a small but important portion of the Federal Government's foreign language program would be lost.

The provision in H.R. 5 adds "foreign languages" to math and science as an eligible area for funding under section 2130: national programs, of "title II—critical skills improvement" of the School Improvement Act. In addition, it sets aside 25 percent of the funds in national programs specifically "for the improvement and expansion of instruction in critical foreign languages." In so doing, it guarantees the continuation of a small but important program focusing on languages essential to our security and economic well-being, and therefore constitute a contribution to our country far in excess of the resources devoted to it.

The second measure establishes a system of Presidential awards for teaching excellence in foreign languages. These awards, by recognizing special achievement in this area, focus on the crucial need to attract and keep good foreign language teachers in our elementary and secondary schools. Few people would, I believe, deny that such a pressing need exists. In a recent survey by the National Association of State Supervisors of Foreign Language Teachers, 57 percent of the States responding reported a current shortage, and almost 65 percent expect to experience such a shortage in the near future.

While considerable attention has been devoted to decreasing the shortage of teachers in other areas, notably math and science, important to our security and economic prosperity, relatively little effort has been made to remediate a comparably great shortage of foreign language teachers.

The Presidential awards take a small but significant step toward correcting this major deficiency in our educational system. A total of 104 awards would be made by the President to elementary and secondary teachers who have demonstrated outstanding teaching qualifications in the field of foreign languages. At least one elementary and one secondary school teacher from each State, as well as the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico, would be selected, thereby ensuring attention across the Nation to foreign language teachers. The cost of this program would be $1 million for fiscal year 1988, with the necessary sums being allocated in subsequent years.

This provision, without even creating a new Federal foreign language program, should significantly add to the prestige of good foreign language teachers, and thereby motivate a greater number of more highly qualified persons to become and remain foreign language teachers. This would have significant value beyond the relatively small cost of the program, as it is now difficult for many school districts across the country to attract and retain highly qualified foreign language instructors.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, foreign language instruction has to date been largely neglected at the elementary and secondary levels in favor of other "critical skills." Given that the ease of learning a second language is inversely proportional to age, it is discouraging to find that only 1 percent of students in our elementary schools receive any kind of foreign language training. Moreover, a 1982–83 survey showed that only 21.3 percent of all high school students were enrolled in foreign language courses, 88 percent of which were in Spanish and French. These distressing facts attest to the need to devote much more, and higher quality, attention to foreign languages, especially at the elementary and secondary levels.

The two measures discussed here should help improve instruction in and attention to foreign languages far more than is reflected by their modest cost. Again, I am delighted that the provisions on the Presidential awards and critical foreign languages, as well as the grants for model programs, are included in the final version of the School Improvement Act. All of these measures should help put our foreign language and international education system back on track, and thereby enhance our future national security and prosperity.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, the Joint Economic Committee's Subcommittee on Education and Health, which I chair, recently completed 9 days of hearings on education and economic competitiveness.

In the hearings, witness after witness forecast a bleak future for the Nation if we fail to match the efforts of our leading economic competitors in producing educated and skilled workers.

Our education system graduates students who cannot adequately read, write or think; who are incapable of filling the jobs of today, let alone the high tech jobs of tomorrow.

Overhauling our education system is a national challenge from which we cannot afford to turn our backs. The future of our children our economy and our Nation depend upon it.

H.R. 5 is an enormous step in the right direction. It provides vital funding to address a wide range of serious problems which plague our population, including adult illiteracy and student dropouts. And vitally important, H.R. 5 encourages program innovation and effectiveness in the awarding of grants.

This bill has been years in the making and is, indeed, a tribute to the dedication and hard work of Congressman HAWKINS. We are all truly indebted to him and his fine staff for the excellent job they have done and the excellent service they have performed for the Nation.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to add my voice to the chorus of support for the conference report on the School Improvement Act of 1987. The conference has made good choices and adequate compromises, where necessary, and has come out with an excellent bill.

We have a tremendous need for the programs reauthorized and newly created by this legislation. They will have an immediate impact on the lives of our kids, particularly those kids who are poor or disadvantaged. Improving their education is the best investment we can make in their future.

That is the way to think about the $7.5 billion we are authorizing today: an investment. The return on the investment will be apparent when these kids become productive citizens because they know how to read and write and multiply and divide, because they know U.S. history, because they have learned how to think about and solve problems.

I am quite pleased that the bill continues and expands a number of programs that have proved so successful in the past—such as the chapter 1 compensatory education programs to help disadvantaged children overcome the limits imposed by poverty, chapter 2 block grants for State and local educational agencies, reauthorizations for magnet schools, impact aid, drug education, adult education.

I also think that we are creating some programs that address real problems and provide real opportunities. The Even Start Program is going to help parents start their children off on the path to knowledge—giving children an opportunity their parents never had. Some of these Even Start kids may eventually find themselves benefiting from the new gifted and talented students program we're authorizing today. The $200 million we are authorizing for basic skills improvement, and the $50 million for dropout prevention, will now enable States to reduce the terrible waste of minds that results from illiteracy, and the hopelessness of high school drop outs.

One other important provision restores the ability of deprived children attending private and parochial schools to benefit from chapter 1 compensatory education programs. Currently, private and parochial schools must cover all the expenses of setting up separate facilities for chapter 1 programs. H.R. 5 authorizes moneys to cover those capital costs.

If there is a downside to this bill, it is that the issue of dial-a-porn has had such a divisive impact on the discussion. I want to solve the problem as much as anybody here. I don't want kids calling those numbers, and I don't think that the committee solution would have worked. I hope we now have a solution that does work. We've got a good bill before us, which I am as proud to support as the original Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965. Let's pass it today.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the conference report on H.R. 5.

This legislation reaffirms the Federal commitment to education: the best investment we can make for our future and our children. I am particularly impressed with innovative programs included in this education bill to:

> Teach our children about the dangers of drugs;
> Prevent high school students from dropping out and limiting their future success; and
> Provide educational opportunities to very young children, and their parents.

This last program, called Even Start, is especially exciting and timely, given our current efforts in Congress and around the Nation to provide affordable, high-quality child care to parents of young children.

"Even Start" would integrate early care and education of children between the age of 1 and 7, with basic adult education for their parents who do not have a high school diploma.

The parents have the opportunity to learn—perhaps to seek a better job—while alongside of them their children are being cared for and provided with the early intellectual stimulation that we know is so important in developing their minds and contributing to their future success.

The benefits of early care and education cannot be overstated, as study after study has shown. Children enrolled in such programs, compared to others from similar backgrounds, are much more likely to graduate from high school, go on to college, and hold a full-time job. They are much less likely to face problems with drugs, teenage pregnancy, dropping out, illiteracy, and welfare dependency.

A relatively small investment in early care and education today reaps tremendous rewards for our children, and for our future economy, by enabling them to compete in an increasingly complex world marketplace.

And while we commit ourselves to educating our children to help them reach their full potential, it is also important to combat influences which can harm, our children, such as drugs and pornography.

I share the concerns of parents and teachers who have contacted me about so-called dial-a-porn telephone services, which amount to over a $50-million-a-year industry. I am very pleased that this legislation takes action against those companies which sell pornography to children over the phone, and charge their parents for the privilege—sometimes hundreds of dollars a month. By passing this legislation, we can protect our children from the influences of pornography.

The elementary and secondary programs that are authorized in H.R. 5, are extremely important to the children of our Nation. It is our responsibility as adults and policymakers to ensure that these children have the chance to reach their full potential, and pursue their own personal goals to better both themselves and the Nation as a whole.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the School Improvement Act of 1988. I am especially pleased that drug abuse education has been extended in this legislation.

Our children are our future and they are endangered by drugs and the criminal activity that surrounds it. Although the national incidence of drug abuse is decreasing, its use by children is increasing dramatically. Drug use, in part, accounts for the marked increase in violent activity by children in recent years. According to Mr. Payne of New York's Family Court:

> We've had almost a 50-percent incease in drug crime. Crack is the main reason. We are seeing kids as young as 10 or 11. They can make $800 a week. They only stay in school because that's where their constituency is.

Children are used as lookouts and couriers for gangs running drugs. Police in Washington, DC, have discovered that child couriers are used to escort drugs on planes from New York City to Washington, DC.

Children in the inner city are in greater danger of being drawn into increasingly violent gangs, gangs that are better equipped with the weapons that their drug money affords.

According to an investigator in the Manhattan homicide unit, the new gangs seem to have "less respect for human life" than previous and older drug dealers.

They kill to intimidate.

They shoot their victims in public, crowded places, often in broad daylight: walking up to them and shooting them several times at point-blank range.

A New York Times article tells of two suspected gang members who were shot and wounded as they alighted from a Mercedes limousine. An 18-year-old woman in the car was shot and paralyzed; her 6-month-old fetus was killed.

By supporting measures against drugs, we in Congress reaffirm our commitment to eradicating substance abuse in our Nation's schools, college campuses, and communities. The School Improvement Act will provide for drug abuse education, counseling, family and school based prevention programs, treatment, referral and training. I urge passage of the conference report.

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report to accompany H.R. 5, the comprehensive 5-year reauthorization of most Federal elementary, secondary, and adult education programs.

H.R. 5 increases Federal authorization levels for education programs by about $1.5 billion a year. Among the programs reauthorized by H.R. 5 are chapter 1, supplementary services for educationally disadvantaged children; chapter 2, a flexible block grant program for State and local educational agencies; math and science programs; magnet schools; the Drug-free Schools and Communities Act; the Indian Education Act; and Impact Aid. H.R. 5 provides additional funding for alternative bilingual education programs such as "English as a second language" and "immersion" and establishes a number of new programs, including Even Start, to provide educational and social services to very young children and their parents; "Star Schools," to support education by satellite technology; and a dropout-prevention program for secondary school students.

I am especially pleased that we will have an opportunity to vote on a provision to bring dial-a-porn telephone services to an end. I have received hundreds of letters from my constituents who share my outrage over these obscene telephone services and want to see the Federal Government intervene.

In 1983, Congress passed an amendment, with my support, to the Federal Communications Commission reauthorization bill to outlaw sexually explicit telephone communications to minors. The FCC has attempted to satisfy the requirements of this amendment twice, yet neither attempt has survived court challenges. A third attempt was proposed last July, but no final rules have yet to be issued. The problem with the 1983 amendment is finding a way to differentiate between the minor and adult callers.

Rather than continue the search for a way to satisfy the 1983 amendment, the Bliley amendment prohibits dial-a-porn services altogether, for both minor and adult callers. As originally brought before the House, H.R. 5 did not include the Bliley language, so I am pleased that we will now have an opportunity to vote on the Bliley language and I am hopeful that it will pass.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I support the conference report accompanying H.R. 5 because it recognizes the importance of education of our Nation's children and I support the Bliley amendment which prohibits obscene dial-a-porn telephone services.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference agreement on the school improvement amendments. As a member of the conference committee, I commend the chairman and my conference colleagues for their bipartisan efforts. I believe we have a strong and effective omnibus education package dedicated to excellence in education.

These amendments reauthorize 14 Federal elementary and secondary programs, extending them through 1993 to avoid a "patch work" approach to our most vital asset: the education of our children. In the future, these programs will be considered comprehensively so as to better coordinate education policy and resources.

The core of this legislation is chapter 1, compensatory education for disadvantaged children. Education enhances one's daily life but more importantly, education can help break the cycle of poverty. Chapter 1 is committed to just that: improving the educational achievements of disadvantaged children to increase their opportunities as well as enrich their lives.

The changes adopted in this bill greatly improve chapter 1. First, chapter 1 is expanded into preschools and secondary schools. Second, funds will be targeted for dropout prevention, a critical problem for minority and disadvantaged students. The amendments also target funds to those with greatest need. As the representative of a rural State, I was pleased agreement was reached on a concentration grant formula which shifts a greater portion of funds to poor, rural areas.

The school improvement amendments also reauthorize the Bilingual Education Act. My district is over 40-percent Hispanic. Thus, the Spanish language is an integral part of our culture and heritage. More importantly, Spanish is often the first language of many of our children. As a result, I want to emphasize the importance of developmental programs in the Bilingual Education Act. Developmental or dual language programs are an effective way to bridge the gap in acquiring English language proficiency, particularly for young Hispanic children who know no other language.

I am pleased that the conference report includes a number of initiatives which I proposed when this bill was first considered in committee. I am gratified conferees came to an agreement on my amendments to the Adult Education Act which target funds to the least literate adults—those who read at a fifth-grade level or below.

As the representative for a number of Indian tribes, including our Nation's largest tribe, the Navajo Nation, I am also pleased with conference action on impact aid and Indian education programs. I supported amendments to impact aid which recognize the added cost factors associated with educating Indian children. Specifically, the amendments provide 25 percent in additional funds above the standard base of 100 percent. These additional funds will directly benefit Indian students and are prohibited from being equalized by State governments.

Additionally, I worked to insure that these funds could not be considered categorical in nature. This provides needed flexibility so local education agencies can expend these funds to the greatest benefit. I also worked to insure that all Indian tribes would be eligible to apply for grants to establish tribal departments of education to coordinate both Federal and tribal education programs, and to develop education standards and policies.

Finally, I am pleased conferees maintained my native American model schools provisions. These provisions direct the secretary of education to designate five schools nationwide for program development in such areas as: math and science, gifted and talented, programs for Indian students interested in teaching as a career, and special needs including social and lingual.

The school improvement amendments will ensure that all of our Nation's children, regardless of ethnic background or economic standing will have equal access to a quality education. In closing I would like to emphasize that education is valuable not only because it increases our Nation's competitiveness but because it enhances our daily lives and enables us to respond to a changing environment.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act of 1988 and its commitment to equal, quality education. I would like to thank Chairman HAWKINS for his work on this legislation.

Our Nation is based on the principle of the equal right to the pursuit of liberty and happiness. We reaffirm our support of this right by offering equal opportunity in education.

Our children are our future, and yet an increasing number are disadvantaged. Twenty percent of U.S. children live in poverty, and since 1979 the rate of children in poverty has increased by over 25 percent. The School Improvement Act provides critically needed funds for disadvantaged children. Currently, chapter 1 programs serve almost 5 million disadvantaged school aged children, one out of every nine students enrolled in U.S. elementary and secondary schools.

Today's legislation will improve our commitment to disadvantaged children by expanding services to preschool children and their parents through Even Start programs, by providing additional funding to districts with high concentrations of poor children if needed, and by targeting secondary schools as an area in need of improvement.

As a former teacher, I realize how important education is to help children to become productive and thoughtful members of our society; as the chair of the Subcommittee on Economic Stabilization, I know how important education is to our Nation's development and ability to compete in the international market.

Changes in the world's economy make high levels of literacy, skill with numbers, and the ability to communicate well imperative to our Nation's competitiveness. To take advantage of rapid changes in technology and increase productivity, our society must become better educated.

Education is the foundation of our Nation's future. As the Children's Defense Fund reported, "A major national commitment shared by Federal, State, and local governments, parents, teachers, and children will be required if all of today's children are to be educated adequately and trained for tomorrow's challenges." This legislation demonstrates that kind of commitment, and I urge all of my colleagues to join me in supporting the conference report.

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5 because I believe the promise of a quality education for each and every child in this country is not just a promise but a right.

The School Improvement Act of 1987 makes good on the Federal promise of participation with States and local schools to ever improve our educational system all across the Nation. We owe it to our children, our future leaders, and the generations to come to continue our diligence in promoting excellence in education. States and local communities cannot provide the best educational opportunities without commitment from the national level.

The current administration has consistently tried to shift the major financial burden away from the Federal level. Many of the programs we are reauthorizing today could have been lost entirely in 1981 were it not for the resolve of the Congress. I am proud to note that the advocacy of educational opportunity is bipartisan as is evidenced in the overwhelming votes for passage of the original bills in each Chamber. Education is recognized as a critical investment in the future of this Nation on both sides of the aisle.

Yes, we are talking about 7 billion. Yes, that's a lot of money. But when we look at many other programs—several costing hundreds of billions of dollars—$7 billion drops into perspective. The Federal Government has an important leadership role in education. We cannot dispute that a strong educational system is vital to economic growth and social progress. Our commitment to America's school children and public education is crucial to our competitiveness.

Mr. Speaker, the programs in this legislation represent our continuing commitment in assisting in the educational reform movement and a commitment to national educational priorities. All of these programs are important, and some of the additional benefits, such as smaller class sizes and parental involvement, are directions toward which we should be moving.

There are two elements of this bill that I am particularly pleased to see included—dropout prevention and youth suicide prevention programs and drug education. Studies reveal a serious connection between dropouts and teen suicides to drug abuse.

We in this body remember well passing the omnibus drug bill in the closing days of the 99th Congress. The bill had overwhelming support in both chambers and was eagerly signed into law by the President. A short 3½ months later, the administration cut its funding request for these antidrug education programs from $250 million as approved by Congress and signed into law by the President to $100 million. Fortunately, these important programs were funded by the Congress at the $230 million level.

I am grateful that the joint House-Senate conference recommends funding for drug abuse education funding to the tune of $250 million. We must reach our youths and teach them the facts if we ever hope to eliminate the demand for illegal drugs in this country. Taking it one step further, we leave the "authorization door" open for the subsequent years relating to this bill—fiscal year 1990 through 1993.

I urge my colleagues to wholeheartedly support the conference report before us today.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, since March 1983, we have witnessed the rapid growth of a new "industry" in America—that of the dial-a-porn market. Since 1983, when the Federal Communications Commission ruled that dial-a-porn dealers do not fall under existing obscenity laws—specifically section 223 of the Communications Act of 1934—the industry has grown from one national service operating out of New York City to several services operating in major cities across the Nation. At the same time, I have been told by outraged constituents that these messages continue to become more sexually explicit and deviant in their content, no longer falling under the realm of "indecent," but clearly falling within the restriction of both State and Federal obscenity laws.

There are numerous court decisions which have established that obscenity, in any form, is not protected by the first amendment. Therefore, the Government may lawfully prohibit its commercial distribution. Specifically, in 1973 the Supreme Court ruled in the United States v. 12 200-ft Reels, 413 U.S. 123 (1973), that "the right to possess obscene material in the privacy of one's home does not give rise to a correlative right to have someone sell or give it to others."

Mr. Speaker, the issue of pornography in general, and dial-a-porn in particular is one that greatly concerns my constituents. They are concerned that their children have unrestricted access to this degrading material. They are especially concerned that Congress for the last 5 years has permitted this type of obscenity to be transmitted over our Nation's telephone lines.

Today, we here in Congress have the opportunity to protect our next generation from the distribution of pornographic material via the telephone. I would, therefore, urge my colleagues to accept the Helms-Bliley language on dial-a-porn.

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, I would first like to commend Chairman HAWKINS for the outstanding job that he has done in guiding this measure that we are considering today. I was privileged to be a member of the conference committee that he chaired and my respect for him has only increased. His unfailing efforts have resulted in a comprehensive measure that is fair to all and that greatly benefits our country's students.

This bill reauthorizes virtually all the major Federal programs that assist elementary and secondary education. I support the provisions that are designed to improve chapter 1 and encourage greater parental involvement. Additionally, this legislation creates several new programs, including one aimed at preventing students from dropping out of school and one targeted to the gifted and talented.

I am especially pleased that the Senate accepted the amendment I authored. The amendment's purpose is to strengthen the Center for Education Statistics. Data and information provided by the Center is used by Congress to help formulate policy and monitor progress in education. Because education is the second largest industry in the Nation and it is overwhelmingly supported by public tax dollars, it is crucial that adequate data be available to determine our efficiency and success in providing educational services to the American people.

Overall, this measure will help a tremendous amount of our children. It is especially critical to those who are educationally needy and disadvantaged. Education is the key to our children's future and thus our country's future. Throughout our history, education has played the central role in allowing each successive generation to achieve beyond their predecessor. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation. By doing so, we reaffirm our commitment that education is, and must remain, a national priority.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act. This comprehensive legislation extends through fiscal year 1993 virtually all major Federal programs for elementary and secondary education. It also includes a number of new provisions to help improve the skills of educationally disadvantaged children and programs to enhance the math, science and foreign language abilities of all our children.

As chairman of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I am especially pleased that this legislation extends the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act of 1986. That act is the drug abuse education component of the omnibus Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986. It authorizes for the first time a comprehensive program of Federal assistance to State education agencies and local schools to help them educate our young people about the dangers of drugs.

The Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act is currently authorized through 1989 at an annual level of $250 million. Under H.R. 5, the act would be reauthorized through 1993 at "such sums as may be necessary" for each year. This will provide flexibility for the program to grow as needed.

Drug abuse is a problem of both supply and demand. Our efforts to reduce drug abuse must attack both facets of this problem.

As a strategy to reduce the demand for drugs, drug abuse education must be an integral component of a comprehensive program against drugs. Teaching our children to reject drugs is especially important at this time. Despite congressional actions to enhance drug supply reduction efforts, the unfortunate reality is that we are years away from seeing any reduction in the supplies of illicit drugs affecting our cities and communities.

The state department's international narcotics control strategy report for 1988 documents that worldwide production of heroin, cocaine, and marijuana continues to increase. Coca cultivation in Latin America is expanding at an estimated rate of 10 percent a year. The amounts of illegal drugs entering our country and flooding the streets of our communities are greater than ever before. These drugs are also cheaper and purer than ever before. Our enforcement agencies at all levels of Government are outmanned and outgunned in their losing battle to stem the rising tide of drug trafficking and drug-related crime.

Drug treatment programs offer little hope of reducing the demand for drugs in the near term. This is not because treatment is ineffective. We know treatment works, but existing programs are woefully inadequate to meet the growing need for services. Most major U.S. cities report long waiting lists for treatment.

With our current efforts in these other areas falling far short of what is needed, drug abuse education offers our best hope to protect our children against the onslaught of drugs. The Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986 was a good first step. But the testimony of State and local education officials before the Select Committee last year emphasized the need for a long-term commitment to drug abuse education by Federal, State, and local governments if we are to have any impact on drug abuse by our Nation's youth.

H.R. 5 reaffirms the commitment of the Congress to a strong Federal partnership with State and local school agencies in developing comprehensive drug abuse education programs in our schools. The bill demonstrates that Congress did not intend the Anti-Drug Abuse Act to be merely one-time seed money but a down payment on continuing Federal support for drug abuse education as part of a comprehensive strategy to fight drug abuse and drug traffic.

At the same time the bill includes some revisions to improve the act. It clarifies the authority of the Department of Education to conduct evaluations of programs authorized by the act. It also adds provisions to increase the accountability of State and local programs.

The conference agreement retains language added by the House that requires State educational agencies to provide technical assistance to local schools that fail to make reasonable progress toward implementing an effective drug education program. This provision was accepted in lieu of proposed Senate language that would have authorized States to cut off Federal drug education funding to local schools that fail to make reasonable progress in establishing effective drug education programs.

I have no quarrel with the concept that ineffective programs should not continue to receive Federal funding. I have been concerned, however, that the Department of Education has not fully accepted the responsibilities Congress gave it in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act to help State and local school agencies identify effective programs and evaluate programs funded under the act.

From my years in Congress, I have learned that when we pass legislation the executive branch does not want—as was the case with the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986—Congress cannot count on the executive to vigorously implement the law. The President signed the Anti-Drug Abuse Act amid a great deal of public fanfare, but 2 months later he proposed deep cuts in many programs authorized by that law including the Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act.

Congress restored funding for that and other programs, and the President's budget this year requests the full amount authorized by Congress for drug abuse education. I remain concerned, however, that the Education Department may be shoveling this money out to States without proper guidance on how to use it effectively.

A recent GAO report, "Drug Abuse Prevention: Further Efforts Need To Identify Programs That Work," GAO/HRD-88-26, December 1987, prepared at my request along with Representative GILMAN, the Select Committee's ranking minority member, justifies my concerns. A number of the report's findings raise serious doubts as to whether the Federal Government is doing enough to identify effective programs and ensure proper evaluation of programs funded under the Anti-Drug Abuse Act.

According to GAO, the Department of Education is not providing the States with an evaluation instrument or guidance because evaluation is a State responsibility and evaluation instruments are already available from other sources. But the report concludes that States are ill-prepared to handle this responsibility on their own. GAO says most States do not have a system to collect information on local drug abuse prevention and education activities; States and localities lack evaluation experience; and most States have not monitored drug abuse prevention and education activities in the past.

Moreover, information Federal agencies are required to collect and disseminate on effective and ineffective drug abuse prevention and education curricula and school-based programs is not yet available to help States and localities.

The GAO report endorsed H.R. 5 as passed by the House requiring States to provide technical assistance to schools that fail to make reasonable progress on their own in establishing effective drug abuse education programs.

This is the approach incorporated in the conference agreement.

The GAO report also recommended that Congress permit States to terminate Federal antidrug funding to local schools that do not make reasonable progress on a drug education program after receiving technical assistance.

I believe the conference agreement is the right approach at this time. In light of GAO's findings, Congress should be extremely cautious before it cedes to States the authority to cut off Federal funding to local schools. The Anti-Drug Abuse Act was intended to provide strong Federal leadership to help States and local schools develop effective drug abuse education programs. It was not intended to punish schools that need help. Before Congress grants States authority to cut off funds, Congress should be satisfied that the Department of Education is doing all that it can to help States and localities identify the programs that work and that the Department is providing guidance and standards for States and localities to follow in evaluating programs.

The conference report on H.R. 5 is a good bill and deserves the full support of the House. I regret my absence for the vote on H.R. 5; at the time I was in my district trying to increase voter participation in the 1988 New York Presidential primary. I would, however, urge all Members to support it.

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, with the approval of the conference report on the School Improvement Act now at hand, I want to publicly commend my colleagues who have worked so hard on this vital legislation and shown their continued support for education in the U.S. Virgin Islands and other insular areas.

The Virgin Islands has been fortunate to gain the steady support of many of my colleagues who are concerned about the schools in our territory and have gone out of their way to help us improve our educational system.

I especially want to thank my good friend from California, the Chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education. It has been a great pleasure to work with gentlemen of their stature over the years. I also am grateful for the help provided by other longstanding friends of the Virgin Islands in the other body.

The General Education Assistance and Territorial Teacher Training Programs are still vital to improving our public schools. We are now moving to gain the annual appropriation for these programs, as authorized in this legislation. This legislation will provide critically needed new buildings, equipment and programs for our growing school-age population. The Virgin Islands is determined to further improve its schools in order to maintain its political stability, prepare its young people for productive roles in society, and move toward greater economic self-sufficiency.

Again, I want to thank my colleagues for making all this possible.

Mrs. SAIKI. Mr. Speaker, education is the promise of our Nation. We Americans have stressed the importance of learning in order to achieve our dreams to make the best of ourselves. As a teacher originally in profession and now at heart, I strongly support H.R. 5, the School Improvement Act, and the effort it makes toward quality education for all Americans.

At the heart of this measure are the chapter I and chapter II programs providing compensatory education and block grants to State and local agencies. These programs are the primary means by which the Federal Government supports education, and they are vital to ensuring equal education opportunities to low-income students.

As my State of Hawaii is highly affected by military bases and other federally funded activities, I must stress the critical importance of the re-authorization of impact aid as included in H.R. 5. Although the formula for this program, affecting "part A" of program grants for operations and maintenance of school facilities, and "part B" for construction of facilities, will not be dramatically affected by this bill, I feel it is nonetheless important to note the continuation of this vital program, which I fully support. The burden which federally impacted districts experience is significant, and under the conference report before us today, impact aid will be re-authorized through fiscal year 1993.

I would like to make a special note of the $10 million authorized for native Hawaiian education. This provision was authorized by my colleague from Hawaii, Congressman AKAKA, and I fully support and commend him for his work in this crucial area.

There are many other programs in H.R. 5 worthy of mention. Through this legislation, our young people as well as older Americans from all backgrounds can take advantage of diverse programs such as vocational and adult education. Magnet schools specializing in music, math and science, or foreign languages will also receive increased funding. I was also pleased to note the inclusion of gifted and talented program funding, so that our "best and brightest" student can reach their full potential.

I commend the members of the House Education and Labor Committee for preparing such a comprehensive piece of legislation and I fully support this conference report.

Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on School Improvement Act [H.R. 5], authorizing approximately $7.5 billion for elementary and education programs through fiscal year 1993.

This bill creates a Presidential Award for excellence in teaching foreign languages. It provides 104 awards to foreign language teachers [1 elementary and 1 secondary teacher per State] and appropriates $1 million annually over 5 years for the program.

Last August, the National Endowment for the Humanities issued its report, "American Memory—A Report on the Humanities in the Nation's Public Schools." The report recommends that "foreign language study should start in grade school, and continue through high school. From the beginning, it should teach students the history, literature, and thoughts of other nations."

In this report, Lynne Cheney notes that "teachers of foreign languages emphasize the lasting value of foreign language study as well as its immediate practical benefits: Studying a second language gives us greater mastery over our own speech, helps us shape our thoughts with greater precision and our expression with greater eloquence." The report continues that the study of foreign languages "provides more than practical skills. It can be a way of understanding ourselves and others."

In recent years, there has been a renewed interest in studying foreign languages. The report states that "nationwide, 29 percent of high school students were enrolled in foreign language classes in 1985-86. This represents a 38 percent increase since 1978. In that year, only 21 percent of these students were enrolled in either a classical or modern foreign language.

The report also states that "severe shortages in foreign language teachers are occurring, and threaten to become worse, particularly in parts of the country where expanded programs are under way."

At this time, it is essential that foreign language educators continue their excellent work and help motivate and encourage their students' interest in another country's language, culture, literature, and history. Knowledge of a foreign language helps to foster mutual understanding between peoples, and most importantly, strengthens U.S. competitiveness in trade.

Both the Congress and the administration have emphasized the importance of increasing our exports and decreasing our trade deficit, and people with language skills are an important part in attaining these goals.

In order to promote the study of a foreign language(s), it is critical that the government encourage teachers in the field, and those majoring in education, to continue their efforts in this area. This is the reason that a Presidential Award should be given to these educators.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference agreement on H.R. 5, the Augustus F. Hawkins and Robert T. Stafford Elementary and Secondary School Improvement Amendments of 1988.

This House, nearly a year ago, passed sweeping legislation to greatly improve and strengthen the Federal commitment to elementary and secondary education. With near unanimity, we said to the Nation and the world that we are not going to sit back and watch our Nation's schools continue to decline. We are not going to punish our children and youth through inaction and neglect.

The Federal role in education is extremely important. While education is mainly in the purview of State and local governments, the Federal commitment is to those children, adults and communities with special needs: those who suffer behind the barriers of poverty, disability, language and discrimination.

We know that our children are the future. But we must realize that today, one-fifth of our Nation's children live in poverty. By the year 2000, close to one-third will be minority or non-English speaking. These children need us, and we desperately need them. Through Federal education programs, we can help each other.

The bill we passed so overwhelmingly last May reauthorizes virtually all major Federal programs that assist elementary and secondary education, including chapter 1 compensatory education, chapter 2 education block grants, bilingual education, adult education, Indian education and impact aid. Passage of H.R. 5 signalled our commitment to our youth and the future of our Nation.

Unfortunately, the companion bill adopted by our colleagues in the Senate stretched beyond education. Responding to the protests of parents outraged by their children's easy access to "dial-a-porn" telephone services, the Senate voted not only to protect the children, but to ban access to "dial-a-porn" for all Americans. It is neither the right of Congress nor its duty to enact such a prohibition.

Clearly, children should not have access to pornography. In fact, transmission of "dial-a-porn" to children is already illegal. However, a ban on adult access to "dial-a-porn" is a different matter. Congress has no right to judge the merits of adult access to this material.

The first amendment to the Constitution protects the right of free speech. It is one of the most highly coveted and widely exercised rights we enjoy. Some limits have been placed on this right, but the courts have not held that obscene speech in all contexts is without constitutional protection.

When the House instructed its conferees to address the "dial-a-porn" issue, we asked them to find a solution—one that would stop the transmission of "dial-a-porn" to children, and also withstand constitutional muster.

I congratulate the conferees for their success in this effort. The agreement called for the prohibition of access to "dial-a-porn" messages unless the phone customer requests such access. Transmission to minors would remain illegal, and in areas where selective blocking is not now possible, "dial-a-porn" services would be halted until it is.

This compromise was endorsed by the National Parents and Teachers Association, the Office of Communication of the United Church of Christ, the National Council of Churches and the American Civil Liberties Union.

But this compromise did not go far enough for those in this body who believe that "dial-a-porn" should not be available to anyone. They sought to substitute a complete ban for the level-headed compromise reached by the conferees. They asserted that a vote against this ban would be tantamount to support for sleaze and obscenity. Unfortunately, this false and exaggerated rhetoric led the House to adopt a total ban on "dial-a-porn"—a ban that violates the first amendment.

The Department of Justice, the Federal Communications Commission and the ACLU all agree that an outright ban will not withstand constitutional challenge. Therefore, I voted against the measure to ban all "dial-a-porn" services. I do not support "dial-a-porn," I support the Constitution.

I will vote for final passage of the conference agreement as amended, because I am strongly committed to our Federal education programs.

I am disappointed, however, that the frenzy to solve the "dial-a-porn" problem has resulted in a nonsolution. The complete ban on "dial-a-porn" adopted by Congress will almost certainly be ruled unconstitutional. With no fall-back provision in place, we will find ourselves right where we started in the battle against access to "dial-a-porn" by children. This is extremely disappointing to those of us who favor action, rather than posturing, in addressing this important problem.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 5, the School Improvements Act of 1988. As the chairman of the Subcommittee on Telecommunications and Finance, and as a conferee on H.R. 5, I wish to focus my remarks on the section of the conference report pertaining to dial-a-porn services.

Mr. Speaker, this House stands united on the goal of protecting children from the exploitation of scurrilous pornographic telephone messages carried through dial-a-porn services. Parents have the right to shield their children from such pernicious practices and to assure that their own telephones be protected against infiltration by dial-a-porn providers who prey on unsuspecting families. There is no disagreement on this goal—the question is the means to accomplish that goal effectively, constitutionally, and promptly.

The conference agreement before the House today, the product of extensive negotiations with numerous outside groups and industry representatives over the last several months, is a monumental step toward the elimination of access by children to dial-a-porn services. Under the proposal, phone companies must, to the full extent technically feasible, provide dial-a-porn services only to those telephone subscribers who specifically request access to such services. If you don't ask for smut, you don't get it.

The conference report is a workable, technologically feasible approach to the dial-a-porn problem which the National Parent Teachers Association, a group most seriously concerned with the protection of children, "unequivocally supports." The proposal is also supported by the United Council of Churches of Christ in the USA. Furthermore, the proposal is recognized as acceptable by the regional Bell operating companies, by AT&T, by GTE, by a number of smaller telephone carriers and by the Information Industry Association, which represents nonadult oriented information service providers. All of these groups are committed to making this proposal an effective one.

Under the conference report proposal, for the first time, Congress will force telephone companies to take specific steps to stop the dial-a-porn problem. And for the first time, Congress will specifically be regulating local, intrastate dial-a-porn services which are not regulated in any way by current Federal law. This is a crucial element of this proposal because 90 percent of dial-a-porn is carried within local areas.

For those who would argue that this proposal is ineffective, let me point to a recent letter of the National Decency Forum, composed of groups such as Citizens for Decency Through Law and Morality in Media. That letter listed three preferences for how to solve the dial-a-porn problem. The first choice, a refusal by a telephone company to carry dial-a-porn services, would be permitted under the conference report. The second, permitting access to dial-a-porn only by written request, is specifically mandated by the conference report. The third preference, refusal to provide billing services, is also fully acceptable under the conference report. Thus even for those who have fought longest and hardest against dial-a-porn, the conference report would provide a swift and effective remedy.

The conference report seeks to take a maximum approach to the dial-a-porn problem while at the same time avoiding the profound constitutional concerns expressed regarding the original Senate language, which would flatly ban all obscene or indecent telephone speech. This approach has already been rejected as unconstitutional in recent congressional testimony by the Department of Justice and the Federal Communications Commission, along with the American Civil Liberties Union. Even the original House sponsor of this language, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLILEY], stated before the House on February 17, that if Congress approved that language, and I quote, "We would still not be closer to a solution of the problem, because immediately the purveyors of these messages would go into court and get a restraining order * * *" We must take action which will realistically address the dial-a-porn problem.

The most clearly objectionable and unconstitutional piece of the Helms-Bliley langauge is its ban on nonobscene, indecent telephone communications. According to the floor statements of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLILEY], this bill represents a "[p]roposed ban on obscene or indecent telephone communications. * * *" It could be more clearly stated that the authors of this proposal seek to ban nonobscene "indecent" telephone speech, despite the fact that no court has upheld any content-based regulation of nonobscene telephone speech, not to mention a complete ban on such speech in any context. Such a ban would directly threaten a huge area of constitutionally protected speech and chill an even broader category of speech.

Despite the constitutional concerns surrounding the Helms-Bliley language, the House has already approved this proposal in H.R. 4401. Thus, the technological proposal contained within H.R. 5 would serve as a backup in the event this language were struck down in court. Members who oppose this technological proposal clearly seek refuge in the all-or-nothing Helms language. If this should be struck down, nothing would be standing in its place.

The conference report before the House today provides Members an effective, pragmatic solution to dial-a-porn that can be implemented today. Given the strong feelings that many Members have expressed regarding the original Senate language, Members will also have the opportunity to vote up or down on that. But given the constitutional questions surrounding that measure, we must have something in place should that fall to constitutional challenge. Members can vote for that safety provision in the conference report—for a real-world technological solution that will help sound the deathknell for access by minors to dial-a-porn services. I urge my colleagues to support the rule and the conference report on H.R. 5.

I am also inserting in the RECORD a memorandum of law on the constitutionality of the Helms-Bliley language which was submitted to the Subcommittee on Telecommunications and Finance last fall following our hearing on this issue. Furthermore, I am inserting a series of letters from organizations expressing their support and acceptance of this technological proposal, including its constitutionality, technical workability, and effectiveness.

ACLU

Washington, DC, April 13, 1988.

Hon. EDWARD J. MARKEY,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Telecommunications and Finance, Committee on Energy and Commerce, House Office Building, Annex II, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MARKEY: We are writing to commend you and the House conferees for your diligent efforts to improve Senator Jesse Helms' amendment to the Education Authorization Bill regarding so-called "dial-a-porn". We have long opposed Senator Helms' language because it infringed upon the constitutional rights of adults, yet in the process did not effectively deny minors access to these messages. A patently unconstitutional statute, mired in endless litigation, would serve no purpose for the many American parents who wanted some federal help in recapturing control of their telephones. Your innovative technological solution would not suffer these extensive constitutional infirmatives.

The most blatantly unconstitutional provision in Senator Helms' language is that which would seek to ban dissemination of so-called "indecent" messages to adults. Although the Supreme Court has indicated in F.C.C. v. Pacifica 438 U.S. 726 (1978) that some regulation of (but not necessarily criminal sanctions upon) non-obscene, "indecent" broadcasting is permissable, it has never even hinted that a flat ban on "indecent" broadcasts would be constitutional.

The Second Circuit Court of Appeals in its recent decision in Carlin Communications v. F.C.C. (No. 87-4054, Jan. 15, 1988) found the prohibition in § 223(b)(1)(A) of "indecent" communications to minors to be unconstitutional. Although recognizing the Pacifica precedent, the court determined that "indecency" regulation for broadcasting may not translate into a justification for regulation of other means of communication. The Second Circuit noted that several courts have struck down legislation which barred "indecent" material on cable televison, distinguishing it from broadcasting because technology exists which enables parents to prevent or limit childrens' access to objectionable cable service: "For some of the same reasons, telephone calls made by an individual over a private line differ significantly from the public broadcast in Pacifica". We heartily agree with this reasoning and believe that if this decision is reviewed by the Supreme Court, it will concur that "indecent" speech cannot be regulated over the telephone.

What the courts are recognizing in these "indecency" decisions is that any regulation, even in a medium which is as pervasive and uncontrollable as broadcasting, which is not very narrowly drawn has the effect of sharply curtailing access by everyone because such access is viewed as inappropriate for children. The Supreme Court has never itself offered a clear definition of "indecency"; the Federal Communications Commission has over the years come up with multiple, largely incomprehensible formulations. If there were administrative or criminal sanctions for allowing a telephone system to contain "indecent" material, the effect would have service providers and telephone carriers steering far clear of the "forbidden zone" to avoid liability. In the telephone area, it is quite foreseeable that services such as healthliness which provide non-obscene, but candid and explicit messages on AIDS prevention, or even "dial-a-joke" lines which may contain some adult humor would all be caught in the net.

It is not even clear that Senator Helms' language is constitutional insofar as it attempts to bar "obscene" communication to adults. Although certain kinds of dissemination of "obscene" material can be prohibited (including importation of "obscene" films or screening of "obscene" motion pictures in public theaters) even if available only to adults, the highly private nature of telephone communications presents different constitutional issues. The Supreme Court in Miller v. California 413 U.S. 15 (1973) provided the basis for prosecution of certain "public and commercial activities" involving obscenity. Although dial-a-porn is clearly commercial, it is hard to construe it as "public" since it generally occurs through an automated, electronic switching system which involves no third parties and has no unwitting participants. The private nature of listening to a recorded message in one's home arguably makes it similar to possessing "obscene" material in one's residence, a right upheld in Stanley v. Georgia 394 U.S. 565 (1969).

Even if courts uphold the facial constitutionality of the statute, it faces challenges as it is applied. Unlike publishers who decide whether to ship material to a specific locale, "dial-it" providers simply make a message available and do not have any way to know where callers will avail themselves of the service. In effect, the law would create a "national" standard of obscenity (tied to the offensiveness in the least tolerant community), rather than rely on local community standards. The Second Circuit noted in its most recent decision on § 223(b):

"True, telephone messages differ from mailings and broadcastings because the caller rather than the provider controls where the message is received. Individuals can access adult telephone messages from anywhere in the country, potentially subjecting the providers of such messages to suit in any district. While we are sympathetic with the argument that providers, to avoid liability, may be forced to comply with the most stringent local obscenity standard, that is a matter for resolution only if and when the statute is challenged as applied. Carlin Communications v. F.C.C. F.2d" (Jan. 15, 1988).

The Conference Committee proposal, however, wisely substitutes a technological solution for expanded criminal sanctions. Moreover, it will effectively eliminate minors' access to such services without seeking to terminate the First Amendment rights of adult Americans.

New § 223(c) essentially recognizes that carriers as well as message providers have a legal obligation to keep obscene communications out of the reach of children. As a practical matter, it provides them with a safe harbor from criminal liability under § 223(b)(1)(B) if they provide otherwise proscribed communications only to those who specifically requested access.

Some dial-it providers have indicated that any effort by a carrier to treat them differently from other providers will result in litigation. Increasingly, however, carriers have claimed that "dial-it" message providers need not be treated identically, and courts have upheld certain content-based judgments. See e.g. Carlin Communications Inc. v. Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph 802 F.2d 1352 (11th Cir. 1986); Carlin Communications v. Mountain States Telephone and Telegraph Co. 827 F.2d 1921 (9th Cir. 1987). Unlike Senator Helms' language which faces innumerable challenges on its face and as applied, the Committee language faces only one possible challenge: may the carrier require subscription for only some services, or is this an unlawfully discriminatory state-directed outcome. Support for such distinctions by carriers is found in a footnote to Carlin v. Mountain States Telephone 827 F.2d 1291, 1297 n.6:

"Depending on whether Carlin's messages are legally obscene, Mountain Bell could still face criminal liability for carrying Carlin's messages. To that extent it could be said that the phone company remains subject to state pressure not to carry Carlin's message. That Mountain Bell might yield, however, to the pressure of an otherwise valid and applicable obscenity law does not convert that law into an unlawful prior restraint . . . Some self-censorship is an inevitable result of all obscenity laws."

To the extent that a carrier requires pre-subscription in order to prevent liability for "knowing" transmission of obscenity to minors, it would seem to be reacting only to the impetus of "an otherwise valid and applicable obscenity law."

When the Education Authorization bill reaches the House floor, some may try to defeat the rule or Conference Report under the bogus argument that this "dial-a-porn" language is too weak. On the contrary, if the purpose of the statutory change is to effectively return control of home telephones to parents and to virtually eliminate access by children to sexual messages their parents consider inappropriate, the Conference Committee language is the most realistic proposal. Although Senator Helms' language may appeal to idealogues, it is so clearly unconstitutional that it will prove useless for its intended purposes.

Again, we commend you and your colleagues for your hard work in this area.

Sincerely,

MORTON H. HALPERIN,
Director.

THE NATIONAL PTA,
Chicago, IL, April 11, 1988.

Hon. JOHN D. DINGELL,
Chairman, House Energy and Commerce Committee, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

Hon. EDWARD J. MARKEY,
Chairman, House Telecommunications and Finance Subcommittee, House Annex 2, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMEN DINGELL AND MARKEY: The National PTA, an organization of over 6.1 million parents, teachers and other child advocates, commends your leadership in sponsoring Part B, Requirements for Common Carriers with Respect to Dial-a-Porn, an amendment to the Communications Act of 1934. Dial-A-Porn has been a source of frustration and complaint by hundreds of parents nationwide. Children have too often been the target populations of obscene and indecent messages; and parents have often been the recipients of unexpected and exorbitant phone bills as a result of a service they did not affirmatively elect.

The National PTA is concerned with the protection of children, not censorship. The delegates to the National PTA 1986 convention voted to support federal regulation of Dial-A-Porn, allowing telephone companies to offer the service only as a paid subscription to customers who affirmatively elect such services.

Therefore, the National PTA unequivocally supports your measure and urges its passage. It provides for an affirmatively elected option for parents who are offended by universal access. The Dial-A-Porn issue is particularly difficult to resolve and we found ourselves walking that fine line of how to protect the children from obscene and indecent telephone messages on the one hand, while not wanting to violate constitutional protection on the other. Your bill clearly meets both concerns.

The strength of the bill lies in its focus. Most of the problems related to Dial-A-Porn are at the local level where children dial the 976 number. Your bill would directly drive national policy down to that level to get at the local Dial-A-Porn services. Your bill would immediately reduce the obscene and indecent message at the point where the consumer makes connection with the vendor—the telephone in the home.

The National PTA believes that your measure is an acceptable compromise and meets our organizational criteria. The bill would not censor, but would allow the market to work; the bill would provide universal blockage, but would allow those who wished the opportunity to elect to do so; the bill would not force parents to accept a service they did not request, but neither would it deny them that service. Above all, we believe this bill is in the best interest of children and would provide parents a relief from unwanted obscene and indecent messages. Again, we thank you for your efforts in protecting the children's interest.

Sincerely,

MILLIE WATERMAN,
Vice-President for Legislative Activity.

UNITED CHURCH OF CHRIST, OFFICE OF COMMUNICATION,
New York, NY, April 13, 1988.

Hon. JOHN DINGELL,
House of Representatives, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN DINGELL: Thank you for taking time yesterday from your busy schedule to meet with me and other representatives of the Telecommunications and the First Amendment Conference. We are grateful for your continued work to codify the Fairness Doctrine and to protect the public interest in such areas as children's programming and public access channels on cable television.

Thank you also for sharing with us your concern about the need for parents to be able to exercise control over their children's access to certain "976" or "dial-it" telephone services. As I have reflected on this issue it seems to me that it is appropriate under the Communications Act for Congress to set parameters under which particular communications services are rendered, as long as such guidelines do not proscribe the free speech of the provider.

The United Church of Christ abhors pornography, but we are equally concerned about the matter of censorship. Your proposal to put certain "dial-it" services on a particular exchange that would be automatically blocked unless the rate payer specifically asked for the service seems to be a good solution. As a matter of principle, the Office of Communication would prefer that all "dial-it" numbers be blocked unless specifically requested, since access to such services frequently creates economic hardship for families that do not understand the financial implications of such calls. Equally important to us is that this solution would keep the telephone companies from making decisions about what types of material should be blocked. For those like the UCC who are concerned to preserve First Amendment rights, this proposal is preferable to any approach that would ban an entire class of speech from the telephone network, or place a common carrier in the position of discriminating between various types of speech.

Just this week two members of my own small office recounted unfavorable experiences with dial-it services. One, having moved from New Jersey to New York, discovered that calls to dial-it weather were three times as costly and had run up a bill of close to $10 in one month. The second case is cause for greater concern. The six year old daughter of one of our secretaries wrote down a television number to call to hear a children's story. When her mother explained that they could not afford calls to such services, the child argued, "Mommy, we don't have to put money into our phone."

These two examples indicate a great need to protect parents financially from unauthorized calls by their children or other persons who may be in their homes. While the need to punch in a code or otherwise authorize access to "976" may cause some inconvenience, it is necessary for the financial protection and safety it affords. Children use the phone freely and do not understand the financial burden it creates.

I am writing this letter as Director of the Office of Communication of the 1.7 million member United Church of Christ and as Chair of the Communications Commission of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the USA, which includes among its membership 32 communions representing 40 million members. While neither of these organizations may speak for any group beyond its own membership, those whom we represent are convinced that parents have a right to protect their children from indecent material entering their home. They may take away a book of which they do not approve and they have a right to blocked access to telephone or cable information which they do not approve without the need for special devices or charges for this right. Your proposal provides this.

Sincerely Yours,

BEVERLY J. CHAIN.

INFORMATION INDUSTRY ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, April 15, 1988.

Hon. EDWARD J. MARKEY,
Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MARKEY: On behalf of the Information Industry Association (IIA), I wish to provide our thoughts on the "dial-a-porn" legislation included in the Education bill. The IIA represents over 650 leading companies pursuing business opportunities associated with the creation, distribution and use of information.

With certain very limited exceptions (such as national security), our nation has long resisted government restrictions on the ability of citizens to acquire and use information as inconsistent with the principles of a democratic society. If we are to realize the benefits of the information age, we must now—more than ever—adhere firmly to this fundamental precept. For the same reason, we must avoid inappropriate government regulation of new technologies.

At the same time, new challenges and issues are emerging which require a careful balancing of competing interests. The "dial-a-porn" issue is an excellent case in point. We strongly sympathize with those who are concerned about the ease with which children may be able to access adult-oriented voice information services. It would, however, be most unfortunate if this problem is resolved in a manner which stifles the growth of the non-adult-oriented services. Such a result would certainly deny our citizens the benefits of new information technologies and may also legitimize government regulation of information solely because its content is objectionable to some persons.

In view of the above, we have worked closely with the Congress to devise a legislative solution which will directly address the dial-a-porn problem. The IIA believes that the solution embodied in H.R. 5 represents an acceptable approach which properly balances these concerns without unnecessarily impeding the operations and growth of other, valuable information services.

The Congressional response to this difficult issue will do much to shape the future of the information age. To ensure that our society reaps the benefits of this new age, we stand ready to provide additional information and assistance if desired.

Sincerely,

KENNETH B. ALLEN,
Senior Vice President, Government Relations.

NATIONAL DECENCY FORUM REPORT ON CURRENT POLICIES OF AT&T AND THE SEVEN HOLDING COMPANIES

One of the seven, the NYNEX Corporation, provides telephone service in New York, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island and Maine. Two proposals have been submitted by NYNEX this month before the Public Service Commission of New York state. The first requests shifting all undesirable messages to one separate number; the second aims to allow blocking of these lines, free for ninety days and then at $5.00 thereafter. NYNEX executives have stated openly that they find Dial-A-Porn "repugnant" but, nevertheless, they claim that NYNEX does not have the right to deny service to anyone. Most of the states under NYNEX have no 976 Dial-A-Porn service. The only exception is New York state, home of the Second District Court that has earned notoriety for systematically frustrating attempts to enforce obscenity laws, under the guise of First Amendment rights. New York, perhaps by coincidence, is also the home of Carlin Communications, by far the largest of all national Dial-A-Porn businesses.

Weakesses: Most people will not bother to request blocking or pay for it, either free or later at a $5.00 cost. Therefore, children will still be able to access Dial-A-Porn messages on most phones. If it can be blocked, all Dial-A-Porn should be blocked and unblocking should be requested in writing. This way most phones would not have access to Dial-A-Porn.

BellSouth Corporation, serving North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee and Kentucky, has, perhaps, the best record of all telephone firms. When Dial-A-Porn appeared in 1983, BellSouth decided to fight. After tough battles in the District Courts of Georgia and Florida, they won the right to disconnect and reject obscene material. The Eleventh District Court upheld Florida's rejection of Dial-A-Porn businesses, stating that so-called "Dial-It" services are private business activities that entitle companies to private business decisions, and are not "common carrier" activities subject to federal law and not permitted to turn down subscribers.

(This seems to be the best action the phone companies can take. Other phone companies should ride the ruling of the Ninth and Eleventh Circuit Courts that Dial-It services are not an essential common carrier activity but a private business activity and not subject to the same government requirements. This would apply both to the regional companies and to some of the AT&T network.)

As efficiently as some companies or their state offices have worked to eliminate 967 numbers from some states, lurid messages can be reached easily by calling long distance to sources in other states or by using an AT&T 900 number available in many states.

The phone companies tell us that due to reasons strictly technical, it is at present not possible for any of them to control calls between or through states (interstate); technology and legislation permitting this is at least a year away, they say.

One noteworthy exception is Southwestern Bell who says that they have successfully blocked access by outside callers in some of their area. They serve five states: Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Arkansas and Texas; all have been free of obscene 976 numbers, except Texas which has four. Southwestern Bell is proceeding against Dial-A-Porn on two fronts. On the state level it has applied to rightfully demand presubscription by users before access is allowed and it has already obtained free blocking upon request. On the federal level, it actively supports the Helms Amendment of the 1934 Communications Act. The bill, if passed, provides for the elimination nationwide of obscene and indecent messages. Known as HR-5, it has passed the Senate 98 to 0 but is now held in the House where observers report some opposition. It should be noted that HR-5 would have jurisdiction only over interstate services, those that cross over state lines, and they represent only a small percentage of the national traffic. Also, if it passes, HR-5 would probably face very serious tests in the district courts of liberal states.

Another network, Pacific Telesis, offering service in California and Nevada tells us that Nevada has no obscene message services. Here, as is also the case in many successful Dial-A-Porn battles, if was a large volume of consumer complaints that prompted effective action by the network. It is not unrealistic to think that widespread and clearly expressed customer dissatisfaction has more effect on telephone companies than practically everything else. Pacific Telesis has recently filed with its state's utility commission for the right to disconnect (commercial) "customers harmful to its reputation;" and it is very close to obtaining the right to block at a nominal fee, one cent.

Their neighbor, U.S. West, offers service to Washington, Oregon, Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, Utah, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona; out of all these, prurient messages are only available in Denver, Phoenix, Albuquerque and Salt Lake City. In a few weeks the company expects to offer free blocking or to move all offensive messages to a separate prefix or a 960 prefix. This new prefix would require the end-user to presubscribe with the local phone company; at this point the company would also discontinue billing for the pornographers, who would henceforth, have the responsibility of billing their clients.

Moving to separate prefixes is not favored by all phone companies. Some do not like the burden it places on them of having to determine what is or is not obscene or offensive. But this has not deterred Bell Atlantic. This large east coast firm covering Washington, DC., Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, West Virginia, and Delaware recently filed with commissions in three of its states to put objectionable messages on such "alternate exchanges" and to block all lines until service is requested by a customer. Like most phone companies, Bell Atlantic says that it is cooperating with all federal efforts. Three Bell Atlantic states, Virginia, West Virginia and New Jersey, are free of 976 Dial-A-Porn numbers.

Phone clients in these states may, in certain areas, find access to phone smut in neighboring states blocked. But, if such is the case, there exists in many parts of the country the possibility of dialing an AT&T 900 number in order to listen to lewdness or obscenity.

Since May 1987, AT&T has taken a number of measures. It has adopted scrambling proposals and has authorized "adult" phone numbers to be clearly marked on their bills. In what is termed "stringent policy," AT&T announced that Dial-A-Porn subscribers (the porn producers) will no longer receive "promotional compensation," a small rebate of .02 to .05 per call offered to promote advertising. AT&T adds that all customer complaints will be referred to the F.C.C. and that upon F.C.C. direction it will disconnect an explicit message. All complaints must include a copy of the telephone bill.

In the north central part of the country, Ameritech (Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin) announces measures of free blocking and affirms their right to refuse to bill for message services that are a "financial nuisance to customers" or harmful to the firm's reputation.

The Second Circuit Court recently clarified the F.C.C.'s right to fine ($50,000 per day) and suspend Dial-A-Porn operators who do not screen calls with I.D. numbers, credit cards or scrambling. On December 7, the F.C.C. initiated warnings against two Dial-A-Porn operators. If the F.C.C. would move quickly against several Dial-A-Porn operators with suspensions and $50,000 per day fines, we would also see a significant impact.

The final wording of Dial-A-Porn legislation being considered by confereees in the House and Senate has complications because:

1. It only addresss interstate traffic, which is less than ten percent of the problem.

2. If indecency is included, it may take several months or years to establish criteria for an indecent Dial-It message or for consenting adults' right of access.

3. If all Dial-It messages are blocked, the entire weight of the phone industry lobby will move against the measure because most Dial-It services are legitimate and growing businesses (i.e. Dial-A-Sport, Dial-A-Prayer, Dial-the-Weather, etc.).

Our recommendations, in order of preference, are:

1. That AT&T and the regional phone companies all refuse service in accordance with the Ninth and Eleventh Circuit Court's decision that Dial-It service is a private business activity and not a required common carrier activity. This relieves the problems of blocking and scrambling and trying to determine what is obscene as opposed to indecent, etc. which could take years to unravel.

2. Breaking out Dial-A-Porn and adult live talk services to a different prefix and giving access only by written request is the next best measure.

Note: If customers are required to request blocking rather than request access, a large percentage of the phones will still have access to Dial-A-Porn service. The neighborhood children will find these phones.

3. The F.C.C. does not require automatic billing for Dial-It services and the phone companies refusal to collect money for the Dial-A-Porn operators may also directly dry up their access to our children.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DURBIN). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLILEY] that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment consisting of the text of that portion of the conference report on the bill H.R. 5 not rejected by the House together with the text of section 7003 of the Senate amendment in place of section 6101 as rejected by the House.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device and there were—yeas 397, nays 1, not voting 34, as follows:

Mr. CRANE changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report on H.R. 5.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DERRICK). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

RECOGNIZING TUFTONIA'S DAY

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring my colleagues' attention that today, throughout the world, my fellow Tufts University alumni are celebrating the fourth annual university "holiday" of reminiscence and revelry we call Tuftonia's Day.

Held every year on April 19, Tuftonia's Day is a special time for the 60,000-plus alumni of this great international institution located in Medford, MA. It is a day for Tuftonians to get together with one another to remember, recognize, and celebrate their alma mater.

Tuftonia's Day derives its name from the title of the venerable Tufts football fight song written by E.W. Hayes, class of 1916. This Tufts holiday has been celebrated in diverse ways and recognized by people throughout the world.

Official proclamations for Tuftonia's Day have been issued by the Governor of Massachusetts and the mayors of Boston, Medford, and Sommerville, MA. In addition to a formal ceremony on campus, there are local and international observances ranging from small gatherings in restaurants to champagne receptions in museums, art galleries, and private homes; from a group trolley ride to a ride on a jumbo elephant in India. Tufts alumni from Hartford to Hong Kong and from San Diego come together to think Tufts, thank Tufts, and toast Tufts.

Tufts University was founded in 1852 and currently enrolls approximately 7,200 students from 48 States and 75 foreign countries. The main campus in Medford, MA, houses the College of Liberal Arts, the College of Engineering, Jackson College, the Boston School of Occupational Therapy, the College of Special Studies, the School of Nutrition, and the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy. The Boston campus contains the Schools of Medicine and Dentistry, while the School of Veterinary Medicine, the only one in New England, is located in Grafton, MA.

I take this opportunity to recognize Tuftonia's Day and join my fellow Tufts alumni throughout the world in saluting the rich history, great accomplishments and continuing excellence of Tufts University. To Tufts students, faculty, administration, and alumni, happy Tuftonia's Day.

FLYNN, DUKAKIS PROCLAIM TODAY TUFTONIA'S DAY

(By Ellen Spirer)

"In spirit of Tufts' contribution to Boston and Massachusetts," Boston Mayor Ray Flynn and Massachusetts Governor Michael S. Dukakis have proclaimed today Tuftonia's Day in Boston and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, according to Assistant Director of Alumni Relations Mike Durall.

Tuftonia's Day, originally the idea of Director of Alumni Relations Ron Brinn, is a day for all members of the Tufts community around the world to "bring Tufts to mind," Durall said.

Brinn noted that the official proclamations "add . . . a nice element" to the day's celebration.

Dukakis proclamation commends Tufts "and its associated hospitals (for housing) long been an integral part of the character of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

"Tufts University has contributed to the educational and intellectual climate of the Commonwealth since 1852," it continues.

"Whereas Tufts has educated Massachusetts residents for many generations and Tufts has locations throughout the Commonwealth and whereas 1985 marks the 75th anniversary of E.W. Hayes' song, 'Tuftonia's Day,' I, Michael Dukakis, proclaim April 19 as Tuftonia's Day," the document concludes.

Tuftonia's Day will be celebrated both at Tufts and by alumni around the world, Durall said. Notices were sent to all alumni, he explained.

In addition, a contest will be held, Durall said, and a prize will be awarded to the alumni or alumnae who celebrate the day in the most interesting way.

Festivities on campus will begin today at 10 a.m. with a speech by President Jean Mayer in front of Ballou Hall.

The proclamations will be displayed in Alumnae House, Durall said.

PROCLAMATION

Whereas Tufts University and its associated hospitals have long been an integral part of the character of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts;

Whereas Tufts University has contributed to the educational and intellectural climate of the Commonwealth since 1852; and

Whereas Tufts University had educated Massachusetts residents for many generations; and

Whereas Tufts University has locations throughout the Commonwealth, in Medford, Boston, and Grafton; and

Whereas 1985 marks the 70th anniversary of E.W. Hayes' song, "Tuftonia's Day";

Now, therefore, I, Michael S. Dukakis, Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, do hereby proclaim April 19, 1985, as "Tuftonia's Day" in the Commonwealth, and urge the citizens of the Commonwealth to take cognizance of this event and to participate fittingly in its observance.

BOSTON PROCLAMATION

Whereas Tufts University and its associated hospitals have long been an integral part of the character of the City of Boston; and

Whereas Tufts University has contributed to the educational and intellectual climate of the Greater Boston area since 1852; and

Whereas Tufts University has educated Boston residents for many generations; and

Whereas Tufts University and its downtown locations have become a vital part of the City of Boston and because 1985 marks the 70th Anniversary of E.W. Lewis's song, Tuftonia's Day: Now therefore,

I, RAYMOND L. FLYNN, Mayor of the City of Boston, do hereby proclaim Friday, April 19, 1985 to be "Tuftonia's Day" in the City of Boston and urge all my fellow Bostonians to join me in recognizing the achievements of Tufts University to the quality of life in our city.

TUFTS STAFF, ALUMNI SET FOR CELEBRATION

MEDFORD.—Alumni, students, and members of the Tufts University community will gather on Friday, April 19, to celebrate Tuftonia's Day, the official school holiday.

Derived from the title of a rousing old Tufts song, Tuftonia's Day is a time of revelry and reminiscence when Tufts graduates, from Medford to Malaysia, from Boston to Brazil, and from Grafton to Greece will raise a toast to Tufts.

The Medford campus will be the scene of day-long activities in honor of the "Spirit of Tufts." President Jean Mayer and Medford Mayor Paul Donato will officially proclaim the day at 10 a.m. on the portico of Ballou Hall, the oldest building on campus. The Beelzebubs, a popular student singing group, will sing "Tuftonia's Day."

The public is welcome to don brown and blue (the school colors) apparel and join the ranks of Tuftonians for these ceremonies.

At 2:30 p.m. in the Goddard Chapel, Tufts traditions will be the subject of an address by university archivist Russell Miller.

Among the other festivities, an ice cream fest will be held on the library roof, the bookstore will offer a 10 percent discount on all Tufts clothing, and the day will come to a rousing conclusion with a Tuftonia's Day party on the Carmichael quad.

Ron Brinn, director of alumni relations, says of the holiday, "April 19 is Tuftonia's Day because it was for a long time Patriots Day, a holiday peculiar to Massachusetts. To a large number of our 50,000 graduates, the day marks the end of winter, the beginning of Spring, the Boston Marathon, and other nostalgic rites of passage."

AN "AUSPICIOUS START" FOR TUFTONIA'S DAY

From the Museum of Contemporary Art in Los Angeles to the French-Swiss border near Geneva, from a flowerpot in Marion, Mass., to a Mexican cafe in San Diego, loyal friends of Tufts all over the world turned their minds and hearts to alma mater in late April as they celebrated the first-ever Tuftonia's Day.

The new holiday was inaugurated by Director of Alumini Relations Ronald C. Brinn, A58, as a way of symbolically uniting each year those alumni who cannot physically return to campus for such annual celebrations as Alumni Weekend and Homecoming. It was officially set for April 19, a date marked in Massachusetts by Patriots Day celebrations and the running of the Boston Marathon. Taking its title from the lusty Tufts fight song composed in 1912 by Elliott W. Hayes, A16, the date was formally designated as Tuftonia's Day on proclamations signed by Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis and the mayors of Medford, Somerville, Boston and Grafton.

Though the event may not have evoked the 50,000-alumni participation that he had optimistically called for, Brinn described the day's festivities as "an auspicious start for a new tradition."

On Tufts' Hill campus, there were a formal ceremony, an ice cream fest and numerous parties, as well as an address on "Tufts Traditions" by university historian Russell Miller. Blue and brown balloons were sold for the benefit of Oxfam America, brown and blue beer was served at MacPhie Pub, and the campus bookstore gave a 10 percent discount on Tufts togs. Both the Beelzebubs and the Jackson Jills sang their renditions of "Tuftonia's Day," and the evening was marked by the university's annual academic awards ceremony and the Jumbo Club award dinner.

In New York's Times Square, the famed electronic billboard on the Allied Chemical tower beamed Tuftonia's Day greetings at 10-minute intervals throughout the day. It then "blitzed" Tufts' message from 10:30 to 11 p.m., when the neighborhood was bustling with theater-goers following the evening's final curtains, Brinn says, adding that the electronic extravaganza was paid for by the Tufts Community Union Senate. A group of young alumni stopped to pose for a picture there in the land of George M. Cohan and Calvin Klein before proceeding on to a party at J.D.'s restaurant on 52nd Street, where, according to group leader Lloyd Zuckerberg, A84, they sang "We Are the World" because they didn't know the lyrics to "Tuftonia's Day."

Los Angeles area graduates gathered more than 100 strong at the city's Museum of Contemporary Art for guided tours of the Count Panza collection and a Tuftonia's Day reception organized by John Nyhan, A65, Sunny (Moran) Breed, J66, Hal Taylor, A55, Laura A.S. Phillips, J77, and Mark Simmons, A80. The event was first sponsored by the Tufts Alumni Alliance of Greater Los Angeles, and, according to Phillips, it was "smashing."

On the West Coast of Florida, three dozen alumni, spouses and friends jumped the Tuftonia's Day gun by one day, gathering at the Windjammer Restaurant in Sarasota April 18 for a good lunch, good fellowship and an update on campus happenings from Senior Vice President Dr. Thomas Murname, A58, D62, D65, G68.

Other parties were held in restaurants and homes from San Diego to Virgin Gorda, and included one in a Chicago restaurant where Nancy (Redfield) Carkhuff, J61, reports that a group "conducted its merrymaking in a rather outrageous manner (just ask the waiter!)." Herb Nelson, E46, describes a quieter celebration which he shared with Bill Burgess, E46. "Bill," he writes, "had grown a special hibiscus to be in full bloom for Tuftonia's Day. His goal next year is that the blossom be on time with the correct colors, brown and blue."

Eric Tiger, Rob Sweren and Kevin Thurm, all A83, observed Tuftonia's Day in Paris together, while Tufts European Center assistant director John Kodis, A81, celebrated Tufts in two countries at once, raising a toast with one foot in France and one in Switzerland. Monica D. Williams, J69, who was traveling closer to home reports with delight, "I was landing at Logan Airport in Boston, and the first thing I saw was a big sign, 'Welcome, Tufts Alumni! Celebrate Tuftonia's Day!' "

Writes Anne Symanovich, J75, "I celebrated Tuftonia's Day with Don Anderson, A74. We had lunch at a Chinese restaurant, where we toasted Tufts with Chinese tea and ordered a jumbo plate of shrimp rolls and beef with elephant-ear mushrooms."

Mementos of the first Tuftonia's Day will be sent to all who wrote to share news or photos of their festivities, says Brinn, adding, "We may never know for sure exactly how many people actually marked the day, but we believe it was a significant percentage of our alumni."

AT&T AND THE WHITE SUPREMACISTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DERRICK). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MFUME] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, when we think of affirmative action programs as a means to right the wrongs of decades of discrimination against minorities, much of the attention is focused on such corporate giants as the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. [AT&T]. While AT&T has had a minority hiring program in place for several years, a recent incident causes me to question the sincerity of the company's efforts to ensure equal opportunities for its 300,000-member work force.

The National Alliance—a self-avowed white supremacist organization that openly expounds the philosophies of Adolf Hitler—owns 100 shares of valuable AT&T stock. The group submitted a proposal forcing AT&T stockholders to schedule a vote tomorrow to suspend the company's minority hiring program. The Nazis' poisonous rhetoric contends that black Americans are intellectually inferior and affirmative action causes low morale among whites.

Identifying the so-called conclusive evidence that the National Alliance cites as proof of its position would run the risk of legitimizing the kinds of racist theories we had hoped were behind us. My festering anger about this matter stems from what appears to AT&T's passive reaction to the white supremacists' proposal.

It is my understanding that AT&T's response was to simply urge shareholders to vote against the National Alliance's proposal so that the company can continue to qualify for Government business. If the almighty dollar is AT&T's only concern about an issue as blatantly racist as this one, minorities and all Americans have been ruefully insulted. AT&T—with all its skilled lawyers and advisors—should have presented the Securities and Exchange Commission [SEC] with an ironclad argument against the inclusion of the National Alliance's resolution on the stockholders' ballot. Not having done so, the SEC ruled to allow such.

I have written to AT&T's board of directors to get a complete understanding of the corporation's position on this incident, and a feel for the depth of the company's commitment to minority hiring.

The AT&T/National Alliance issue has surfaced at a time when we as a nation are analyzing our progress in race relations in the 20 years since the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Unfortunately, evidence reflecting a lack of such progress abounds.

Last year, the Howard Beach murder in New York and the mass demonstrations in Forsyth County, GA reeked of an apparent relapse into a society we had hoped was relegated to the pages of the history books.

Once regarded as havens for social change, institutions of higher learning are revealing demonic elements of bigotry as well. Race related confrontations have been documented at a number of colleges and universities nationwide.

It is quite distressing to see that our future leaders are no closer to resolving longstanding differences than our former leaders were 40 years ago.

Actions by groups such as the National Alliance are likely to haunt us for countless decades, but any entity that uses the teachings of Adolf Hitler as the bases for its beliefs should not be allowed to influence corporate America. Moreover, individuals and businesses—including AT&T—that are in a position to educate the ignorant and misinformed must always take a firm stand in doing so. It troubles me that, in the case of AT&T and the National Alliance, a corporate giant may have proven to be a shrinking violet in the face of a racially inspired act. I anxiously await AT&T's reply concerning this very important issue.

"JUST SAY NO WEEK"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HUTTO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to introduce a bill designating the week of May 8–14, 1988, as "Just Say No Week." We are all well aware of the tremendous ramifications due to involvement in illegal drugs. This plague is of great concern to most Americans. Parents of school-age children are particularly aware of this problem.

Peer pressure is a major factor in the increasing use of drugs by teenagers. Because of greater emphasis on the contribution of peer pressure to the drug abuse problem, Just Say No clubs are being formed in schools all across America. These clubs are designed to help prepare elementary and junior high students to take a stand against the pressure to experiment with and use drugs.

This week of May 8–14 is designed to recognize the fact that our youth are our most precious resource and encourage them to contribute to drug abuse prevention by starting Just Say No clubs. Children all across America will participate in a national Just Say No Walk Against Drugs on May 11. Our young people should be recognized and applauded for these efforts.

Because of the work of many in this body, a war against illegal drug use was begun with the passage of the omnibus drug bill. Let us continue our efforts to fight drug abuse and observe the week of May 8–14 as Just Say No to Drugs Week. We must keep up the good work to rid America of the infestation of drugs and make our society drug-free.

COIN DESIGN CHANGES ARE NOT REVENUE RAISERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, there are in both Houses proposals which would encourage the Secretary of the Treasury to change the designs of our circulating coinage. Supporters of these proposals have claimed that design changes will generate billions of dollars of revenue to reduce the deficit through an increase in seigniorage. Seigniorage is the difference between the cost of minting a coin and its face value. The more coins that are minted the greater the seigniorage which would be generated. Supporters claim that design changes will greatly increase coin demand, thereby increasing seigniorage.

Some have claimed that the increase in seigniorage could be as much as $2.3 billion over 5 years. History shows that the chances of that happening are remote.

In the past 42 years, there have been six changes in the designs of U.S. coins which have not involved the introduction of a new coin or a change in metallic content.

The changes since 1946 have involved every denomination except the nickel. One change, the cent, involved only the reverse of the coin. Two changes, the dime and the half dollar, involved a redesign of both sides of the coin. The three remaining changes involved 2-year changes for the Bicentennial of Independence of the reverse of the quarter, half dollar, and dollar coins.

None of these changes support the premise that design changes involve great increases in coin demand. In fact, some of the changes showed a decline in mintages.

In 1946 the Liberty Head dime was replaced by the Roosevelt dime. The mintage increased from 241.2 million in 1945 to 344.2 million coins in 1946. Increased mintage of the dime in 1946 may also be due in part to the increased economic activity following the end of the Second World War. Regardless of the reason, the 1946 mintage is virtually identical to that of the 1944 Liberty Head dime. In 1947 dime mintage drops off sharply in the second year of the new design, perhaps due to economic conditions or perhaps to an excess of dimes minted in the first year of the design. Mintage of Roosevelt dimes during its first 2 years is actually 6.3 percent less than the last 2 years of Liberty Head dimes.

The Franklin half, introduced in 1948, actually shows a lower mintage than the last year of the Walking Liberty coin that it replaced, with the number of coins declining from 8 million to 7 million. Although the mintage for the second year of the new design increased, it was still less than for the next to last year of the Walking Liberty design. Like the Roosevelt dime, the mintage for the first 2 years of the new design was less than for the last 2 years of the previous coin. Indeed the first 2 years of the new design showed a mintage 21.6 percent lower than the last 2 years of the old design, 20.4 million coins compared to 26.0 million.

The reverse design of the cent was changed in 1959. This change provides the most evidence of increased mintages resulting from new designs. In 1959 1.89 billion cents with the new Lincoln Memorial reverse were minted, up from 1.05 billion coins the previous year. What role a new design had on the increase mintage is hard to ascertain because the Nation suffered a rather severe recession in 1958. Coin demand, which is affected by economic conditions, had fallen in that year, and cent mintages for 1958 had declined 21 percent from 1957. The increase in cent production was more likely due to the improved 1959 economy than to the design change. While the 79 percent increase in cent production appears large, it is dwarfed by the 154 percent increase from 1963 to 1964, a period during which the design—and composition—of the cent remained unchanged.

For 1975 and 1976 the reverses of the quarter, half dollar, and dollar coins were changed in commemoration of the Nation's bicentennial. In 1977 the old reverses were resumed. The mintages of those coins, like the permanent changes previously discussed, show no consistent pattern. The mintages of the three coins share no common pattern. Claims that design changes generate large increases in coin demand find no support in the evidence from that period.

Considering the 2-year periods before, during and after the bicentennial design, a consistent decline in quarter mintage is apparent, from 1.73 billion in 1973–74, through 1.67 billion in 1975–76, to 1.53 billion in 1977–78.

For the first year of the commemorative design in 1975, when interest would have been expected to be the highest, the number of coins struck declined 29 percent from the preceding year, from 1.155 billion in 1974 to 817 million in 1975.

Bicentennial half dollars and dollars show different and more erratic mintage patterns then the quarter. For those two coins, the 2-year bicentennial coinage has a higher mintage than for either the preceding or succeeding 2-year periods. The first year's mintage of the bicentennial coinage is higher than for the second year. The number of coins struck in the second year of the bicentennial design is less than the number of coins struck in the year before the new design was used.

Mintage patterns for the half dollar and the dollar show differences as well as similarities. Mintages for the preceding 2 years was higher than for the succeeding period of the half dollar. For the dollar the pattern was reversed. More dollars were minted in the 2 years following the bicentennial coinage than in the 2 years preceding the bicentennial design.

Those claiming that design changes will generate billions of dollars in revenue base those claims on assumptions that have no connection with fact or reality. They include such wild claims that demand for half dollars will increase twenty-fivefold in the year preceding a change in design, and that quarter demand will quadruple.

As anyone can see from a study of past design changes, there is absolutely nothing that supports the assumption that a change in design will lead to great increases in coin demand. Indeed, the evidence suggests that the effect that coin design changes has on coin demand is so small as to be impossible to measure. It is negligible at best. Without that demand, there will be no increase in seigniorage. And without that seigniorage, there is no increase in revenues to reduce the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, I want Members to understand that there is no additional revenues to be gained from changing coin designs. If there is any reason to change our Nation's coin designs the Secretary of the Treasury has the authority to do so without congressional approval. We should reject attempts to respond to the siren's song of easy revenue through coin design changes, because there are no profits to be made.

LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH NATIONAL SYSTEM OF TRAUMA CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing legislation to amend Medicare to provide incentives for the establishment of a national system of trauma care.

Trauma is the medical term for injury. Motor vehicle crashes, firearms, falls, drownings, poisons and fires account for most trauma deaths in the United States. Trauma is the most preventable public health problem in the country today, but it remains the leading cause of death for Americans under age 44. More than 4.1 million preretirement work years are lost to injury each year, nearly three times the amount of work years lost to cancer.

While there has been a great deal of improvement in the quality of emergency medical care in the United States, not enough attention has been given to the very specialized problems of trauma. My legislation does not deal with the normal, outstanding operations of the Nation's emergency rooms: The broken finger, the stitches for a child, or even a heart attack. It does deal with bringing the miracles of modern medicine to the victims of various traumatic accidents who face death or lifelong handicaps unless they receive very specialized care very, very quickly.

In the United States, 1 out of every 12 deaths is from trauma and an estimated 80 percent of the severely injured never get appropriate care. Only 10 percent of American communities are served by an effective trauma system. The overall death rate from trauma for American teenagers and young adults is 50 percent higher than it is for their contemporaries in other industrial societies. It is appalling that in this age of advanced medical technology we continue to allow trauma to take lives and permanently maim 340,000 people each year. These people lose limbs, sight, and mobility as a result of preventable accidents and inadequate post-accident response system.

Trauma is not an age-specific disease. Severe injury affects all age groups. Each year more than 160,000 Americans die from injuries. Trauma is the number one killer of children under 14 and is responsible for four-fifths of the deaths that occur between age 15 and 24.

It is particularly appropriate that the Medicare laws be used to encourage the improvement of the Nation's trauma care, because seniors are especially vulnerable to death and handicap from accidents. Approximately 30,000 persons age 65 or older die of injuries each year. Patients over 65 have up to two to three times the risk of dying from their injuries than those under age 65. Not only are older trauma victims more likely to die from their injuries, they are more likely to develop complications and die from those complications.

When addressing appropriate care for the trauma victim, time is of the essence. Studies prove that patients die for lack of prompt diagnosis and treatement. The key word is "prompt". The key issue is how to provide the patient with the most appropriate care in as short a time as possible. Immediate treatment saves lives and restores the victim of serious injury to an optimum level of function.

As our emergency medical service system exists today, trauma treatment within the appropriate time period is not norm. In about a third of trauma cases, there is what experts call the golden hour after injury during which the victim's life could be saved by proper treatment—but too often is not. Due to the lack of an organized structure in which to deliver effective and efficient treatment, appropriate trauma care is often delayed. The usual cause of preventable death is related to timeliness of surgical intervention or lack of surgery when surgery is needed. An appropriately configured and focused acute health care system can substantially reduce the mortality of major injury, as well as the morbidity and societal costs which, in 1986, approached $120 billion.

Trauma centers are hospitals with highly skilled surgical teams on duty around the clock. Patients suffering life-threatening injuries are rushed to these centers where the trauma team's quick response can save their lives. Organized, regional trauma care systems have been shown to reduce preventable deaths from injury and to improve patient outcome. In Orange County, CA, preventable death rates were as high as 34 percent. Following the establishment of an organized regional trauma system, preventable mortality was reduced to 15 percent. In San Diego and Imperial Counties, CA, a 22-percent preventable death rate was reduced to 6 percent as a result of an organized system of trauma care delivery.

But the treatment of trauma victims is very expensive: In today's increasingly tight Medicare budgets, hospitals have found that being a trauma center is less an honor and mark of distinction than it is an invitation to red ink and bankruptcy. This is particularly true in urban areas. We must find ways to ensure that hospitals which are designated as trauma centers under the plan required by my bill will be adequately reimbursed. One of the sections of the bill calls for an early report on the adequacy of DRG payments and outlier policy for trauma treatment.

The primary objective of the "Medicare Trauma Care and Emergency Services Quality Assurance Act of 1988" is to require each State to plan and develop a regionalized trauma system in order to ensure optimal emergency medical treatment for citizens in all areas of the Nation. A section-by-section description follows:

MEDICARE TRAUMA CARE AND EMERGENCY SERVICES QUALITY ASSURANCE ACT OF 1988—SECTION-BY-SECTION DESCRIPTION

I. REDUCTIONS IN MEDICARE PAYMENT FOR STATES WITHOUT TRAUMA PLANS

Provides that the Medicare weighting factor under the prospective payment system for trauma-related cases to hospitals in states without a trauma and emergency services plan will be considered to be zero. This will have the effect of reducing payment to zero but the hospital will still have an obligation to provide the service.

A hospital in state with a plan will be required to provide evidence satisfactory to the Secretary that it complies with the standards and guidelines of the plan.

II. DEVELOPMENT OF STATEWIDE TRAUMA AND EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICE PLANS

A trauma plan must provide for designation of hospitals as trauma centers, specify standards for pre-hospital care and emergency transport, and specify standards for inter-hospital transfers.

The plan must be developed by an agency of state government designated by the Governor.

The plan must establish standards and criteria for the designation of Level I, II, and III trauma centers, taking into account geography, transport system capabilities, trauma center distribution, and population density.

III. GRANTS TO STATE FOR DEVELOPMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF STATEWIDE TRAUMA AND EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES PLANS

The Secretary shall make grants from the Medicare Part A Trust Fund to states to develop and implement statewide trauma and emergency medical services plans.

Each state may receive up to five cents per capita under this authority subject to a matching requirement of 60 cents in State funds for every 40 cents in Medicare funds.

IV. STUDY AND REPORT.

The Secretary is required to study and report to Congress by March 1, 1990 on the adequacy of payment under Medicare for trauma discharges including payment for outliers.

WAR IN THE PERSIAN GULF

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, today in talking by telephone with my constituents, I find a great deal of confusion about the status of the war in the Persian Gulf. I have tried to explain to them that war in the Persian Gulf is the price we pay for dependence on foreign oil from the Middle East. To protect the oil lifeline, the U.S. Navy escorts oil tankers to insure safe passage to destinations in the United States, Western Europe, and Japan.

U.S. ships have the right to sail in international waters. The U.S. Navy has the responsibility to protect its ships and sailors at sea. We Arkansans support a shoot-back policy in the Persian Gulf, but we also know that if we had a national energy policy, our military presence there would not be necessary. What we are currently seeing in the Persian Gulf is the inevitable escalation of the war that may continue for years to come.

Our dangerous dependence on foreign oil is likely to get worse in the future, if our policies do not change. The Office of Technology Assessment has reported that imports could reach 50 percent of U.S. oil consumption by the early 1990's or earlier. The Office estimated that this could amount to a $50 to $60 billion drain on the U.S. balance of payments.

If our energy came from the heartland of America, and not the Persian Gulf, we would not have to ride the emotional roller coaster of sudden upsurges and declines in the price of oil. Immediately after the United States-Iranian naval clash in the gulf, prices on world oil markets jumped to their highest levels this year. That surge continued a rally in oil prices that was set off in early April when the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries convened an unprecedented conference with oil-exporting countries that are not OPEC members to seek strategies for inflating prices. The volatile oil markets could change at any time, and the price could fall or skyrocket again; but the point is that our energy prices should not be determined by OPEC, or by the latest military clashes in the Persian Gulf—it should be determined by what we do in the heartland of America. Otherwise, we can be buffeted about by the changing winds of international politics, at the mercy of far away events over which we have little or no control.

A national energy policy would strengthen America from within and enable us once again to become a producer nation instead of a consumer nation dependent on foreign production to supply our vital interests at home.

DR. FRANCIS E. CONRAD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, the Veterans' Administration and the Nation have lost a great friend and truly dedicated public servant because of a senseless act of violence. On April 7, Dr. Francis E. "Frank" Conrad, Director of the VA Office of Quality Assurance here in Washington, was stabbed to death by an irate tenant of a Chicago apartment complex who was upset that he was about to be evicted. Dr. Conrad had gone to the complex to help his daughter find an apartment.

Dr. Conrad, who had been with the VA for 15 years, established the first technology assessment program for the agency's Department of Medicine and Surgery. He also developed the foundation for a computer-based quality assurance information system, technology that will enable the VA to monitor and maintain the delivery of high quality health care to our Nation's veterans.

Dr. Conrad worked closely with the Veterans' Affairs Committee and, in fact, was scheduled to testify on VA quality assurance at a hearing this week.

Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues will want to join with me in expressing sympathy to Dr. Conrad's two daughters upon the loss of their father and in solemnly noting the passing of a fine gentleman and distinguished physician. He will be greatly missed.

VIEWING THE WORLD FROM THE PACIFIC RIM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. NEAL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I was among the Members who had the privilege of representing this House at the Pacific Parliamentary Caucus in Makaha, Oahu, HI, January 9-11, 1988.

This annual meeting of Parliamentarians and other officials from the Pacific nations is sponsored privately by the Pacific Forum and the Atlantic Council of the United States.

I found the Pacific Parliamentary Caucus an extremely valuable forum for discussing economic, political, and security issues with our friends and allies in the Pacific. It was so useful, in fact, that I am urging my colleagues to take a greater interest in this forum and to give it our strong support.

At this point, I would like to insert in the RECORD an executive summary of the proceedings of this year's Pacific Parliamentary Caucus, as well as a list of participants. This summary was prepared by Adm. L.R. Vasey, president of the Pacific Forum, and M. Mark Earle, Jr., Asia-Pacific consultant to the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies.

Our colleagues in the Congress will find this report timely and helpful in understanding our interests and opportunities in the Pacific.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY—PACIFIC PARLIAMENTARY CAUCUS

This report is the Executive Summary of a recent Pacific Parliamentary Caucus which brought together under private auspices Pacific and European legislators who have responsibilities for Pacific policies. The views contained herein are those of the authors and may not reflect the views and opinions on a particular issue of individual participants.

Appreciation is expressed to the staffs of the Pacific Forum and The Atlantic Council of the United States for their support in the preparation and conduct of the Caucus. Particular appreciation is expressed to Rick Greenwood of the Congressional Reference Service and The Atlantic Council, and to Job Dittberner of The Atlantic Council for their assistance in organizing Caucus participation and in coordinating with the North Atlantic Assembly.

A. GENERAL

A Parliamentary Caucus was held in Hawaii on the 9th, 10th and 11th of January 1988. This was the fourth Caucus in a series that have sometimes included legislators from Europe and other times included only participants from Asia-Pacific.

The purpose of these non-partisan exchanges is to: Provide an informal forum for parliamentarians at a time when national legislators are becoming increasingly influential in national policy making; provide a regular means for inter-parliamentary consultation and mutual assessment of international policies; deepen mutual understanding of each other's critical issues, and; contribute fresh insights on shared problems and opportunities critical to national decision making processes.

Participants included 24 parliamentarians from 7 Pacific countries, a special delegation of 12 from the North Atlantic Assembly (NAA), 12 resource specialists, and 9 observers.

The following points summarize the exchanges. They reflect differences as well as areas of agreement. Because of the emphasis on candid and open exchange, not all of the facets of a particular topic might have been raised during the course of a particular discussion. The points capture the essence of a parliamentary dialogue; they should not be viewed as consensus conclusions.

B. HIGHLIGHTS OF THE PRESENTATIONS AND EXCHANGES

1. Economic Issues

a. Economic issues will be the dominant factor in international affairs in the mid-term and will significantly influence political and military developments.

b. There was general acceptance that the three main problems facing the world economy today are: The U.S. trade and budget deficits; the trade surpluses of Japan, the FRG, and the NIC's, and; the burden of developing country debt.

c. The solution to these problems needs to come first from the U.S. (meaningful budget cuts, appropriate tax increases, sustained export expansion) and then be blended with reduction of trade surpluses by others. The boldness of the changes necessary to restore financial confidence increases significantly with time.

d. Most U.S. participants thought that the majority of the changes needed to improve economic performance were internal, not external. Focusing on domestic issues, however, is not synonymous with a retreat to fortress America.

e. The perceptions of the debt problem and feasible solutions varies among economic specialists, public officials, and parliamentarians. Most favor a pragmatic step-by-step approach because it is more realistic politically than solutions that might destabilize the financial and commercial systems.

f. A new attitude is needed regarding LDC debt—that pragmatic partial solutions do not involve just rolling-over the debt because of a series of mini-crises. Developing country leaders and private sector investors need to be convinced that the process underway will actually reduce the debt burden that is limiting growth.

g. A Southeast Asian commented that the developing countries are facing a trilemma: Making adjustments to meet imposed stabilization programs; achieving growth rates that will continue to increase well-being, and; the necessity of implementing social programs such as income or land redistribution to further broaden the process of democratization and ensure stability.

h. The Southeast Asian further held that developed countries are viewed as not fully understanding these problems from developing countries' perspectives. Moreover, industrialized countries are, in general, viewed as reacting to immediate self-interests, rather than formulating and implementing bold policies that would assist developing countries respond to domestic and international realities.

2. The Soviet Union

a. Even though the Soviet Union has continued to improve its military capability in the Pacific, the U.S. and its allies and friends currently enjoy a posture of regional military superiority. This is due to a number of factors: the capability of U.S. forces; access to a network of forward support bases; cooperation of allies and friends through a variety of security and political agreements, and; certain inadequacies and vulnerabilities of the Soviet force posture. This superiority is expected to continue into the foreseeable future but will be influenced by budget considerations.

b. The total dimension of the Soviet threat, however, should include non-military aspects of Soviet behavior, such as subversion, political influence of opposition leaders, increased diplomatic activity, and misinformation. This is particularly true as it related to developing countries, including the South Pacific Islands.

c. There is a cautious optimism in East/West relations created by a series of reform pronouncements by Gorbachev and other Soviet leaders. The parliamentarians, however, believe that the Soviet's intentions and behavior should be tested over time; attitudes and policies should not be altered based only on declaratory reform statements.

d. The parliamentarian's primary interest in Gorbachev's reform policies was in the impact of their success or failure on West/West and East/West relations. What would constitute success or failure of the reforms was not raised during the Caucus discussions.

3. The INF Treaty and Arms Control Negotiations

a. The INF Treaty is universally viewed in more political than military terms. While some find certain flaws in its logic or provisions, it is more comprehensive (especially relating to verification) than the parliamentarians would have predicted several years ago. Its general content is favorably endorsed, and its passage without major change by the U.S. Senate is expected.

b. The next steps in negotiations will be undertaken in several areas—strategic missiles, tactical nuclear forces, and conventional forces. At a minimum, these negotiations should be based on a comprehensive view of the interrelationship of all military, political and economic aspects of East/West relations, including human rights.

c. A clear majority of the parliamentarians thought that linkage issues among negotiations should not be employed to inhibit progress on specific agreements. However, the overall progress of the negotiating process must remain satisfactory and a difficulty encountered in a specific negotiation should not be of such a "unique" nature that it would change the pace or scope of the negotiating process.

d. Arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union should be conducted from a "global" perspective. For example, the SS-20 elimination was not treated as a "Europe only" issue. The INF experience also illustrated the value of Pacific rim countries conveying directly to Moscow their interests relating to specific negotiating issues, when appropriate.

e. Military strength and options should be maintained until arms control negotiations achieve acceptable outcomes. Reductions should follow successful completion of arms control negotiations. Those involved in arms control negotiations believe that the Soviets respect power and real power is a major factor in achieving satisfactory results in negotiations.

f. As has been the case for sometime, not all agree on the credibility and wisdom of the concept of flexible response in NATO. As negotiations proceed further, the impacts of possible arms control outcomes on the flexible response concept need to be publicly explored in order to develop continuing support for NATO's defense strategy.

4. Political Issues

a. The factors with the highest potential for destabilizing regional relationships are a significant worsening of U.S. and Japanese trade frictions and/or passage of a highly protectionist U.S. trade bill.

b. European and Pacific rim parliamentarians believe that Japan must play a broader role in economic affairs than previously. Japan should also provide appropriate political leadership when circumstances warrant.

c. The expansion of Japanese military defense oriented capabilities is viewed by some as an action of considerable importance and priority. Others favor a modest expansion of force levels, and that only following a multilateral coordination of security issues.

d. At a minimum, given the current yen-dollar ratios, the financial support for U.S. forces in Japan by the Japanese should be increased.

e. One factor limiting the Japanese from assuming new and expanded roles is the lack of specific suggestions from allies and friends as to such roles. Moreover, the suggestions would need to be sufficiently coordinated so as to have credibility. They should not be so put in final form, however, that they might be viewed by Japan as "demands."

f. Another factor limiting Japan assuming new roles is the lack of an internally generated "vision" of such responsibilities. Perhaps what is needed is a statement like the MITI "Vision of the 1980s" which was successfully used to shape and guide Japan's international industrial activity.

g. Asia-Pacific parliamentarians had little or no support for continued testing of nuclear weapons by the French in the Pacific Islands. Participation, however, of French parliamentarians in the Caucus dialogues is considered important to develop better mutual understanding of a range of other regional issues.

5. Key Factors Influencing Regional Policy Trends

a. The need is evident for an in-depth evaluation of the factors that will have major impacts on Asia-Pacific political and economic policies over the next decade. Among the most important are: A slow but continuing realignment of relations among Asia-Pacific countries is occurring, particularly as a result of the growth of Japan and the NICs. These changes are altering the relative weights of the elements of national power; the fact that the economic changes have not been accompanied by shifts in military power; the declining value of military conflict as an element of power, a trend that can be expected to continue; the leadership of most Pacific nations can be expected to be of a new type—one that is not rooted in the experiences of the 1940s and 1950s. The mood of these new leaders fits well with the external orientations of their economic strategies, and; regional cooperation in Asia-Pacific will increase but remain non-governmental in nature, strongly influenced by private sector initiatives and interests. The tripartite Pacific Economic Cooperation Conferences is one example of such activities.

b. European parliamentarians tended to be more concerned than their Pacific counterparts about gaps and tensions arising from the lack of a more formal multilateral coordination mechanism than anticipated by those from Asia-Pacific.

c. The realignment of power now underway means, in part, that the industrialized countries must improve their ability to listen to the non-popular perspectives from other countries, especially those from developing countries.

6. European-Pacific Basin Linkages

a. The need to manage Western relations with the Soviet Union and Eastern Bloc will remain the central link between the Pacific Basin's interests and those of Western Europe. A successful GATT Round would also be an important forum for interregional linkage.

b. But, it seems unlikely that a new, comprehensive negotiation will be initiated to move the international financial system beyond "Bretton Woods." Yet, some interregional financial interests are addressed through the G-7 financial ministers' consultation process, and by the U.S. and Japan on a bilateral basis.

c. The role of Western Europe in Asia-Pacific is an economic and political one—helping keep markets open, supporting developing country expansion, and broadening the processes of democratizations. None of the participants thought that an out-of-area security role should be pursued. However, the deployment of European forces to the Mid-East to protect oil tankers reflects a willingness to project forces in situations of critical importance.

7. Parliamentary Exchanges

a. Parliamentary exchanges within Asia-Pacific and between this region and Western Europe should be expanded for several reasons. Among them is the need to clarify differences on key issues. Examples noted during the Caucus discussions include: the Philippine situation (the Europeans were much more pessimistic about political stability than their Asia-Pacific counterparts); next steps in regional cooperation (the Europeans tended to want more formal government involvement than did those from Asia-Pacific); and, differing views on the nature and potential dangers of bilateral U.S. and Japan frictions.

b. The need to strengthen parliamentary exchanges within the Pacific Basic and interregionally should be pursued first within existing mechanisms. The initial exchanges should stress dialog more than consensus building.

At the conclusion of the 1988 Caucuses, it was agreed that the Caucuses was of such high value that they should continue on an annual basis. The format will be expanded so that Asia-Pacific issues can be fully treated as well as common global problems and those of an interregional nature.

THE POLITICAL RHETORIC HEATS UP

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SWINDALL] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. SWINDALL. Mr. Speaker, as the November elections approach, the political rhetoric gets hotter and hotter and as I hear the political rhetoric I am reminded a little bit of the story about Sir Winston Churchill. Reportedly, Sir Winston Churchill was listening to the leader of the socialist government in Great Britain go on and on and on extolling the virtues of socialism and the various accomplishments under socialism in Great Britain. After having taken credit for virtually everything from increased milk production and increased egg production, increased hospital bed space and virtually everything imaginable, he then made the statement, "In fact under socialism Great Britain actually increased its population at an unprecedented rate of increase."

At that point, Sir Winston Churchill stood up and said, "At least the last statistic I hope the gentleman will attribute to private enterprise."

I am reminded of that because today one quote that comes to my mind is one made by Jesse Jackson in which he said, "our message is very clear, stop economic violence against the American worker, major corporations should stop merging corporations and purging workers and submerging our economy."

Mr. Jackson's rhetoric is not unlike a lot of rhetoric that we are hearing about the current state of our economy. In fact many economists, the same economists, I might add, that had been projecting and predicting economic recession for 65 consecutive months, now have it seems a vested interest in wanting to have an economic recession, and I dare say that if anyone had spent 65 months predicting a recession and they make a living on the validity of their predictions I can understand why they want to see a recession. But the point is neither Mr. Jackson's comments nor the various economists' comments are borne out by the facts. The truth of the matter is that we are now in the longest economic recovery, peacetime recovery in American history. We are now in our 65th and beginning our 66th consecutive month of economic recovery.

Mr. Speaker, during these 65 months we have seen 15 million new jobs created, more than half of those new jobs being jobs that pay more than $20,000 a year.

We also see that if we look carefully at those jobs they have been created by small businesses, crank-up businesses. In fact none of those jobs have been created by the so-called Fortune 500 companies, the reason being that the Fortune 500 companies have basically maintained a negative or net zero in job growth or job loss. We have seen 4 million new businesses started in the last 65 months.

All of that has contributed to the fact that unemployment has dropped from 10.8 percent in October of 1982 down to the current level of 5.5 percent. That is particularly significant given the fact that every percentage of unemployement equates to roughly $40 billion in deficits. That is a combination of income that is lost because people are not employed and therefore cannot pay taxes so revenues are down, but also to the fact that unemployment benefits are triggered when we have unemployment. So as bad as the deficit is relatively speaking it is actually significantly better than it would have been for the current economic recovery.

In addition though, we find that productivity in the manufacturing sector has been up 4.1 percent each year during this economic recovery.

Perhaps the most positive news is the fact that the real earnings are up 9 percent. That means after we adjust for inflation individual Americans are able to go to the supermarket and buy 9 percent more today than they could in 1981.

Let us also remember that in 1981 many people were elated to find they would get an 8 or 9 percent cost-of-living adjustment in their weekly paychecks only to have it more than eaten up by 13 percent inflation that they found in the supermarket.

What is perhaps most surprising about Mr. Jackson's comments is the fact that 2.4 million new jobs, in other words 16.2 percent of all the jobs created in the last 65 months, were created for black Americans. That is the best economic performance in black history since World War II.

During the 5-year period overall job growth was 2.7 percent per year. For black Americans it was 4.7 percent per year or nearly a 25-percent increase over the 5-year period.

Unemployment for adult black males has dropped from a high of 18.1 percent in 1983 to 11.1 percent in 1987, nearly a 40-percent decline.

Job growth for black teenagers was 8.2 percent per year, up over 40 percent during the 5-year period.

Unemployment for black teenagers is certainly an area that all share great concern for and has dropped from a high of 48.5 percent in 1983 to 34.7 percent in 1987. That is nearly a 30-percent decline. Unemployment for black women dropped from 16.5 percent in 1983 to 10.9 percent in March 1988, a 34-percent decline.

But perhaps the most heartening of all the statistics is that in terms of real income blacks have benefited the greatest of all groups because from 1981 to 1986 real income for black Americans rose 15.5 percent compared to 13.1 percent for white Americans.

I mention all of these statistics in this economic growth pattern as a backdrop for what this Congress is getting ready to do. Mr. Jackson refers to submerging the economy. This Congress is on the verge, quite frankly, of trying to fix something that is not broken because, if you look at the legislative agenda over the remainder of the 100th session of Congress, you will find that we have in place a number of pieces of legislation that, if passed, could cumulatively bring about the very recession that these economists have been predicting.

Let me start by looking at the trade bill which we are going to consider this week. The trade bill, first of all, I think is flawed because it focuses about 95 percent of the so-called solution on what is roughly 15 percent of the problem. According to the Ways and Means Committee's own testimony only about 15 percent of our current trade deficit is directly attributable to unfair trade practices. I will be the first to acknowledge that we need to tackle head on unfair trade competition, subsidies from foreign governments that put our own industries on an uneven playing field, but certainly we have got to be realistic and recognize that at best that is 15 percent of the real problem.

Hidden in this trade bill though are a number of pieces of legislation that could seriously hurt American workers. I would like to focus on one in particular. It is the plant closing legislation.

The proponents of that legislation contend that, if it passed, it will protect American jobs. The reality though is that rather than protecting jobs it will actually eliminate jobs. Here is the reason that it will eliminate jobs:

The idea behind this legislation is that, if a plant foresees that there is a possibility that it will have to close its doors over the next 60 days, it would be required by law, if this trade bill passes in its present form, to notify its employees, and in doing so, needless to say, all of its competition, its suppliers and its purchasers, may well have to close its doors in 60 days.

Well, the net effect of that is that anyone that is supplying raw materials to the plant will immediately either insist on cash payments or shut off shipments to the manufacturing facility. Simultaneously, anyone placing an order with that factory will secondly think whether they want to really take the risk of placing an order that may not be able to be satisfied because the plant may not be there in 60 days, or so the management of the plant says.

In effect, this bill would have basically the same result as any business going down to the Federal courthouse in filing bankruptcy proceedings, and we all know that when bankruptcy proceedings are filed, even if they are reorganization plans, it has a chilling effect on that particular business' likelihood of success. So, what we actually have here is, no matter how well-intended the bill may be, a piece of legislation that would damage the likelihood of that business struggling as it is surviving.

And we only need look at contemporary history in Europe to see that those of our European trading partners and competitors that have embraced the same flawed logic have learned that it has not worked. Why do you think we have created 7½ times more jobs in the last 65 months than all of the other industrialized countries in the world combined? It is because we have not rushed toward the socialistic policies, and all socialism is, let's face it, is centralized planning in a microscopic way what is best for business rather than letting the free market dictate what is best for business.

Another piece of legislation that gives me cause for concern is the minimum wage bill that was to have been considered last week and has now been rescheduled, I understand, for May. There are a number of problems with the minimum wage bill, not the least of which it will most impact the bright teenage unemployment population that we have addressed earlier and concluded is really improving, though it still needs a great deal of improvement. Because we know again from history that, when you raise minimum wages, what you do is you shut out those individuals who have the least experience, who need to enter at the lowest level, and most individuals who enter at the lowest pay schedule rapidly move beyond minimum wage.

But this reminds me a little bit of my own history when I was growing up. My father had a retail furniture business. From time to time he would sell on credit, and I would from time to time have to take credit applications. And inevitably when young teenagers, just married, would come into the store wanting to establish credit, I would have to take the credit application, and 9 times out of 10, before I even asked the question, I knew what the answer was going to be when I would say, "Tell me about your previous credit history," and the young man or woman would say, "Well, I don't have any previous credit history," and then I would have to tell them that the great likelihood is that the application would not be accepted because you first have to have good credit to get credit, and you could see the frustration on the young man's or woman's face when they said, "Well, how do I get credit if you won't give me credit?"

This is kind of like watching a dog chase its tail. I do not know what the answer is, but the point is we are replicating that same frustrating situation in the marketplace when you say to a young teenager who comes in wanting his or her first job, "Well, why should I hire you? I can't afford you at $5.05 an hour because you're unproven," but actually the ramifications go far beyond that.

Mr. Speaker, I spent time in my district in northeast Atlanta yesterday with the administrators of a private hospital, a hospital run by the Catholic Church there called St. Joseph's. They have a fine record in terms of specialization and things like heart transplants, and we were talking about a number of problems which they anticipated legislatively. And they focused my attention on the minimum wage bill because they said that if that passes, it will wreak havoc not only on this hospital, but hospitals throughout the country, because, unless Congress at the same time modifies the Medicare regulations and the Medicare law so as to reflect the increase that will inevitably come in our cost, we are going to be strapped worse than we already are. Specifically, they were referring to what we call DRG's, diagnostic-related groups, which are prescheduled payments based on the diagnosis, and they understand that, if you go in because of congressional meddling and say you now have to raise minimum wage, which inevitably causes every other pay tier to be raised simultaneously, there is a ripple effect that will cause huge inflation, not only in the pay scale of that hospital, but also in the pay scales of the various providers who provide supplies and medical material to the hospital, and all of those impacted by the inflationary hikes are going to have to be passed along to someone.

What they said in short was, "Please don't vote for that bill unless you're prepared at the same time to raise the Medicare payments," and I looked at them and smiled, and I said, "You and I both know that with $150 billion-plus deficits projected this year and next year we can hardly realistically expect any increases in Medicare payments.

So I think it is fairly evident that, if we want to be responsible in this body, we would be very ill-advised to pass a minimum wage hike without looking at the ripple effects throughout not only the entire national economy, but our own budget as well.

Another piece of legislation that concerns me is the so-called Parental Leave Notification Act, another one of these pieces of legislation that we here in Congress advocate so frequently because on first blush it looks so compassionate. What this legislation says is that, if you are an individual in the job market or job place who is also of child-bearing age, you may—in fact, you will be guaranteed by the Federal Government a period of 18 weeks parental leave whereby you may take time to be with your family, which is certainly a desirable objective, and then return to your job at the same pay scale. Sounds good on first blush, but let us look at the real world in which these policies have to be implemented.

What will inevitably happen is that, if you are one of these 4 million new businesses that have just cranked up in the last 5 years, chances are you started like most businesses. You started with a great idea, a lot of enthusiasm, a lot of determination and drive with a core of key employees who are willing to gamble with you. They are willing to gamble that your idea will work, and, like so many individuals who have had that entrepreneurial spirit in the past, you will cash in down the road, and along with you, the entrepreneur, come all of the employees that were faithful and loyal with you. But now we have got the Federal Government saying that, if you hire someone who happens to be of child-bearing age and that individual chooses to take parental leave for up to 18 weeks, you have got to hold their slot open at the same pay. Well, any intelligent employer, no matter how much they may think that one applicant who is of child-bearing age is well qualified and in fact perhaps better qualified than someone else that is competing for a job is going to instantly recognize that they are infinitely better off if they hire the individual that would not pose the potential Federal problem if they take the parental leave, and, lo and behold, when they want to come back, you have already filled that necessary position that is paying say $35,000 a year and now have to create another position for $35,000 a year which you don't need and certainly cannot afford. So the employer will simply, not wanting to do so, but driven by the desire to succeed and avoid this legal morass, choose the person who does not fall into this congressional mandate. And thus the bottom line effect is that you are actually going to adversely impact the very group of individuals whom you say you are trying to help.

Next we have got this legislation called mandated health insurance. This is truly a problem that all of us have to think about because we know the rising, spiraling cost of health is something we all have to grapple with, but we also know that 95 percent of all the businesses in America are already providing health insurance. But here comes the Federal Government. If we are to pass this piece of legislation that is basically consistent with our philosophy in the trade bill of addressing 95 percent of the solution to 15 percent of the problem, we are going to address 100 percent of the so-called solution at 5 percent of the problem. The net effect is the Federal Government will have written half of the contract in an inflexible fashion so that we basically stop many of the individuals who are out there wanting to test an idea in the marketplace without interference from the Federal Government from ever even testing their idea because we have simply put the barriers for starting up that business so high that they could never get over the first hurdle.

Talk to individuals who are out there trying to start up new businesses. They will tell you that the No. 1 obstacle that they face is all of the compliances that they have to worry with that Federal law has in the past put out there for them to have to worry about as a condition precedent to starting their businesses.

Why do we want to put obstacles out there at a time when the current formula is working at an unprecedentedly positive fashion?

Another piece of legislation that we need to look at is the catastrophic health insurance proposal that is now in conference. There has never been a piece of legislation more appropriately entitled than this one because it is truly a catastrophe.

If you look at that legislation, what it does is first of all, in the name of catastrophic health, does not even address the main concern that senior citizens have and that is long-term nursing care.

But worse than that is this bill is going to be financed by a new creature of Congress. It is called a premium but in fact it is a tax. But it is a new tax that focuses exactly on the people who can least afford it, senior citizens.

I say it is a tax, not a premium, because you and I both know that a premium is something that is based on the risk assumed and it is spread equally. A tax, on the other hand, is something that is based on any individual's ability to pay, has no relationship with the risk assumed.

Well, this bill is based on various senior citizen's ability to pay. But the other fallacy to this piece of legislation is the actuarial soundness of the particular proposal is backed up by the same crowd who backed by the actuarial soundness of Medicare in 1965. The same folks who in 1965, before Congress passed Medicare, said that by 1985 the total outlays of Medicare would be roughly $8 billion, only missed the mark by about $62 billion, because rather than having outlays of $8 billion, the 1985 outlays for Medicare were over $70 billion. If they could miss the mark that badly I will bet you a nickel to a doughnut that they have missed the boat just as badly in predicting that this catastrophic health insurance package is actuarially sound.

Well, what happens if it is not actuarially sound? Two things happen. One is that we have to increase the premiums on senior citizens down the road, the tax.

The second thing is we cannot live up to the promises we have made in terms of providing the beneficiaries the benefits that they have been promised.

One other point that I want to touch on is another statement attributed to Mr. Jackson which I think is worthy of note because Mr. Jackson is not the only one who is making this statement. In fact, Mr. Dukakis, I believe, has also stated there is really not much difference between him and Mr. Jackson on the issues; he just has more experience.

But Mr. Jackson makes the statement

> Reagan Tax cuts were based on the notion that the poor had too much money and the rich not enough so they took from the poor and gave to the rich.

That certainly has a lot of appeal but let us look at the facts.

Just last week the IRS released tax data for 1986 which shows that the share of income taxes paid by the top 1 percent of the American taxpayers has soared to 26 percent, a 47-percent increase over the 18 percent that the same group paid in 1981. Quantitatively the top 1 percent has paid taxes at the rate of a $45.7 billion increase, 1986 over 1981.

By contrast, the bottom 50 percent of all the taxpayers in America paid only 6.4 percent of the Federal income taxes in 1986, down sharply from the 7.5 percent that the same group paid in 1981.

While actual taxes paid by the bottom 50 percent have risen only $2.8 billion since 1981, far less than inflation.

So what the IRS numbers show is that the top 1 percent paid more than 25 percent of the total income tax load while the bottom 50 percent paid 6½ percent of the total load; $45.7 billion more for the top 1 percent; and $2.8 billion more for the lower 50 percent.

As Walter Mondale said in 1984, "Where's the beef?"

But that is not enough. Look at one other fact. Since 1981 the top 5 percent of the taxpayers in the United States of America have paid 75 percent of all the new taxes collected, nearly double their share of the adjusted gross incomes that they report.

All that really leads to a point that I think we need to focus on as we move toward November. That is we have to start looking at the difference between the rhetoric and the facts, because the other rhetoric is "we have got to raise taxes in order to address the budget deficit."

When you hear folks say that, remember that they are the same folks who said back in 1986 when we passed the tax reform package that that package was going to result in new fairness, simplicity, and revenue neutrality.

Now I say that recognizing that most Americans last week filled out those new obnoxious forms, they paid their new taxes, and most of the ones that I talked to over the weekend were having a hard time finding the fairness, the simplicity, or the revenue neutrality.

But the same crowd that told us—and that is the majority right here—that somehow we were going to come forth with fairness, simplicity, and revenue neutrality in the Tax Reform Act of 1986 is now telling us we have got to raise taxes to address the deficit.

That is the equivalent of saying, "We need to bring in some gasoline and pour it on a raging fire if we want to put it out." Because the reality is that revenues are up this year more than 50 percent over what they were in 1981, the year we passed the Economic Recovery Act that was supposed to be a tax cut. It was a rate cut but it was not a tax cut.

Revenues are up 53 percent because of two factors: One, the economic recovery has been working; but, two, because Congress has over the last 5 years increased taxes by $1.5 trillion starting with the TEFRA package that passed in 1982 which was a 5-year tax increase, all of which we have absorbed now, of $229 billion.

Then it goes on from there. But while we are talking about TEFRA let us remember that when Congress passed TEFRA it was able to persuade the President of the United States to sign on to that tax increase by saying "Mr. President, if you will sign this tax increase we promise you for every dollar in new revenue we will cut spending 3."

Well, we now have the history to check out the veracity of that particular representation. We find that in fact we did pass not only that $229 billion tax increase but another $1.2 trillion as well. But we find that rather than Congress cutting spending $3 for every dollar of new taxes, Congress actually increased spending by at least $1.38 for every new dollar in taxes.

I guarantee you if we raise taxes again, Congress will match that tax increase with more spending. In fact, Congress has done that every time it has ever raised taxes.

If we want to address the deficit we have got to understand why we have a deficit. If we have increased revenues by 53 percent over the last 5 years—and incidentally, 1986 over 1985 was a $70 billion increase—people say, "Well, if there is a $70 billion increase why do we have a bigger deficit, particularly if Congress had been cutting all this time and freezing?' That is all I hear about, cuts and freezes. You can understand that only if you understand how we in Congress define the cut which is substantially different than the way folks back home describe and define a cut.

Back home most people think a cut means you spend less this year than you spent last year. But here in Congress a cut is defined as spending more than you spent last year but not as much as you wanted to spend. That is the baseline that we are always cutting off. All a baseline is, is the projected spending increases if we kept increasing spending at the same rate that we have been in the past.

But the point is this: In 1960 when John Kennedy was elected President, at a time when we were spending half of the entire budget on defense, 10 percent of what we all earned, on defense, the entire revenues in this country for the Federal Government were 18.3 percent, outlays were roughly the same, 18.3 percent and we had roughly a balanced budget. By 1970, Federal revenues had increased to roughly 19.3 percent, Federal outlays had increased to roughly 19.3 percent; still a balanced budget but up 1 percentage point in terms of percentage of GNP. By the end of the Carter administration, though, revenues were up to 19½ percent but expenditures were up to nearly 25 percent of our collective revenue, income as a country. That is 24-plus percentage points of GNP.

Defense was down to 5 percent of GNP, less than 25 percent of the total budget.

In other words, defense had been cut in half but yet expenditures skyrocketed.

The deficit today is the result of the increase in the percentage of GNP that the Federal Government is not consuming. And every single time the Federal Government increases expenditures it has to take that money out of the American families' budget.

So in 1988 the issue is going to be which budget is more important, the family budget or the Federal budget? Because those two are in irreconcilable conflict with each other.

All I can say is when we know that at this time May 5 is the taxpayer liberation day—what I mean by that is that is how long the average American must work to earn money to pay Federal, State, and local taxes. In fact, we really ought to change the filing date from April 15 to May 5 so people will see how long they have had to work for the Federal, State, and local governments just to pay their tax bills before they can feed their first child or do anything for their family.

That date is May 5 which is where it is now, the latest it has ever been in American history. I think it is time for us here in Congress to say we will pledge to the American people that we will not raise their taxes, but we will cut spending.

I will talk about ways to cut spending in another special order, but I want to close tonight by saying that we have got a lot to be thankful for, not the least of which is an economic recovery and expansion that is unprecedented.

Frankly, I think we can sustain for as long as we have the resolve in this body to let the free marketplace do its business without Federal intervention along the lines of all of these pieces of legislation that are very harmful that we are getting ready to pass in the name of trying to help the American worker and also practice what we preach. Before we ask the American family to tighten its belt one more time, let us tighten our belt right here in Congress.

WHO IS THE ENEMY?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Derrick). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kanjorski] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this special order as a means to report to my colleagues in the House of Representatives on a recent trip I had the occasion to take to West Germany on March 25, 26, 27 and 28, together with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Foglietta], my fellow colleague.

We flew to West Germany to examine some of the policies of the U.S. Army and Air Force in that area. The questions that we were prepared to face were what was the policy of the American Army and the American Air Force in regard to heating American installations in West Germany, and how did that impact on the American domestic coal industry for, you see, Mr. Speaker, I represent the heart of the American anthracite coal industry in northeastern Pennsylvania.

Most American anthracite comes from my district. My interest in going to Germany was very parochial in nature. It was to see whether or not some effect could be had to improve, or at least maintain, the sales of the anthracite coal industry to the military for purposes of heating military installations in Europe and the anthracite industry itself.

I confess a very parochial intention.

In response to my duties as representing, together with Mr. Foglietta who represents the port of Philadelphia, that we wanted to examine to see whether or not the policy of the U.S. Army and the U.S. Air Force was justified in changing from coal heating sources, of use of American coal, to other sources including natural gas.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, and the reason I take this moment to speak to the Congress is that my eyes were not only opened in Germany, I walked away from the discussions with our highest Army and Air Force officers absolutely appalled, appalled at the fact that it was not any question of just what energy source was used to heat military installations in Germany, but the total absence of a decisive analysis and opinion and decisionmaking based on that analysis of what was best for the best interests of the United States.

It seemed to me that it became quite obvious that requests were made to save money, and the narrow scope of what it would cost to use one fuel as opposed to another, what it would cost to change and update the physical facilities to use one fuel as compared to another was the only analysis by the military forces. What they failed to analyze, what they failed to question was what would this do to the self-interest of the United States. How would this affect the relationship of the Soviet Union in the United States?

In fact, what it posed to me, truly, is who is the enemy, and why are we in Europe. It is these questions that I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues.

First and foremost, we found out that over 90 conversions have already been performed in West Germany under legislation that had been passed by the Congress and approved by the administration over the last 3 years. These 90 conversions and the additional ones that are now pending will have been the largest public works program in the Republic of West Germany of any time, past or present.

The fact of the matter is the American taxpayer will have spent over $1 billion to improve the domestic heating systems in many of the municipalities in West Germany and will also serve some of the military installations controlled, owned and operated by the United States forces in West Germany. That was shocking. A billion dollars supposedly in a defense budget that really constitutes public works.

We asked some pertinent questions. We asked who decided that these systems should be changed, because the law says that the host nation, the Central Federal Government of the host country, is the only source where this question can be raised and where the request can be made. In fact, we found in all instances the military informed us that it was the local burgomaster, the mayor of the local community, who decided that he wanted to update his heating facilities, and therefore, requested that the American taxpayer stand the expense.

That wasn't a bad enough question. The next question was who is going to benefit. Well, we knew one thing, the American taxpayer was the last person to benefit, because he was going to pay the bill. But we did find out several people that did benefit. One, our good friends in West Germany. They will end up with some of the most modern technology, most modern central district heating systems in the world, and those systems will be paid for within 10 years even though their life expectancy is well over 40.

Those German businesses and German residences that will use those facilities will be competing against American businesses for the next 40 years with public utilities paid for by the American tax dollars under the guise of national defense.

That is not the worst of it. What that means is that for the next 40 years German industry and German residences that use those district heating plants will have a lower cost of heating compared to any American competitor.

But the worst question is: Where does the fuel come from that heats those German heating districts, that heats American installations and bases and that are paid for by the American taxapayers? Lo and behold, we found out that that natural gas comes from the Soviet Union. Naturally, we shouldn't only help our friends in Europe, the West Germans, to pay for their public utilities, but now it seems that as a matter of American national policy we should help the Soviet Union, our supposed enemy, with hard currency so that they can deal with us, so that they will provide the natural gas to heat American military installations in Germany.

Twenty to 35 percent of the natural gas used in West Germany today comes from the Soviet Union. They get that hard currency out of the American defense budget, and they turn around to buy the missiles and the installations and the methods that force us to provide the standing armies in West Germany to protect West Germany and Europe at some estimated cost as high as $70 or $80 billion a year.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I walked away asking the question: Who is the enemy? Who won the war? Indeed, are we, the American people, the only ones that are not aware that the war is truly over?

We cannot dictate what the Government or the people of West Germany do. If they want to buy their natural gas from the Soviet Union, indeed, maybe they have to buy their natural gas from the Soviet Union, but we can dictate as the Congress of the United States and as the administration, the President of the United States, what the policy of this Government should be in regard to helping the enemy or buying energy from the enemy.

It is one thing to buy strategic materials that we are without or that we need for our national defense and another thing to buy energy from the very enemy or supposed enemy that we identify as the evil empire, the one that we are spending $300 billion a year to defend against, the nation that supposedly some of my colleagues earlier today in debate said you cannot trust; they have never kept an agreement. There is no reason in the world that we should ever deal with them.

I do not know the answers to these questions, and I do not want to suggest that I actually know whether or not we should buy or participate in the purchase of natural gas from the Soviet Union.

The only thing I know for certain is the strategy and the policy to do so has not adequately been thought out, and certainly has not been a decision made by the President or by the Members of this Congress but, indeed, by contracting officers in the Pentagon at the request of mayors of West Germany cities, and I think when the American people pay their tax dollars, they not only intend or want, but they should demand, that decisions such as this to underwrite the utilities of West Germany or to purchase the natural gas of the Soviet Union should only be made and decided upon by the elected officials that they send here to Washington, whether it be the President or the Members of this Congress, but certainly not be contracting officers in the Pentagon or on local bases in order to facilitate good public relations. That is what it ends up being.

Worse than that, there are other questions. There is security, integrity. Are these bases secure? What will happen if we have a war between November and April and the Soviet Union decides to cut off the heat, cut off the source of energy for these facilities? Or do we have an understanding with the Soviet Union that we will henceforth not engage in war-like activities in the winter months of Europe? If we have such an understanding, I wish we would let the American people know that.

What some of the other problems posed were: We found the Army determined that they could make these contracts on what they call sole source contracts, that they were provided by German utility companies, and there was no intention to bid or need to bid under the law.

The Air Force, on the other hand, said these couldn't be sole source contracts and had to be bid.

It seems to me that the Army and the Air Force should be able to get together. Whatever the law is, whatever the principles are which are to be followed, both our services should be acting in the same way.

In fact, there are very strong indications that the methods of contracting are inappropriate and possibly improper, and further studies should be had in those areas, too.

Mr. Speaker, we have talked about $800 hammers, we have talked about excessive commode seats. Here is a very simple military expenditure of $1 billion that we enter into with the West German Government that we underwrite entirely with American tax dollars, and we do not have sufficient negotiation.

Why do I say that? Because in a direct question posed to the Army officials, I said, "What are the terms? Under what conditions are the facilities handled? Who does the design work?" The answer was, "Well, under the host nation agreement, the design work is done by a German engineering company for the German Government on American installations." I said, "That is possibly understandable for safety purposes. Who does the construction?" In the 90 instances we studied, these facilities are German design, by the German Government, German constructed by German construction companies, German owned by the German utility companies, but America came in at the end. The American taxpayer paid for it.

I asked the military officials did they not negotiate, and they said, oh, yes, they had negotiated all 90 of these contracts.

My suggestion is we hire a new negotiating team. They have been up to bat 90 times, and 90 times they have failed.

I cannot think of a more perfect record of success for the German Government, or more perfect record of failure for the American Government, but most especially the American taxpayer.

When we talk about spending $1 billion for modernized heating systems in West Germany, just imagine what that could do to the infrastructure here at home. Just imagine what military installation pays for any central heating system in any American city it is located near.

It is the American utility company that pays the capital and provides the service at an equal rate to the U.S. Government for any installations located anywhere in the United States.

It only seems that when we go abroad where we have an open check that we wind up footing the whole bill.

Mr. Speaker, we found other irregularities not only in the definition of who the host country was; in our examination of section 2690 of title X of the United States Code, it says that the host nation is the Federal Government of that nation. But in this instance, we asked, and in none of the 90 contracts awarded did a Federal official of the Republic of West Germany make the request for the conversion, but in every instance it was a mayor of the local community.

The defense in some instances was said that it is the Green Party; they insist on a strong environment. But then we asked if that is the case, why are they burning in some of these new conversion plants German coal which is less effective and less clean than American coal? Of course, their answer was, "Well, Germany subsidizes its coal industry. It will do so for another 6 to 8 years, and then it will deregulate its coal industry, and it will be open to competition." The only problem with that, Mr. Speaker, is by that time the Soviet Union will supply almost all of the gas to West Germany.

Coal will be a product they no longer mine, and American industry will no longer have an edge to compete in to sell that resource.

It seems to me that we have to ask some questions. Out of all these issues that we examined when we were over there, there was only one ever-abiding problem, and that is there was never a real analysis of the economic impact of the decision to buy and use Soviet natural gas for the heating systems of central districts in West Germany that ultimately would heat American military installations.

I think that requires a policy decision at the highest level. That final policy decision may be that that is the only practical thing to do. It may be that it is the most economic thing to do, or it may be a raising of the question, Why are we providing these facilities in West Germany? Why do we not require the Federal Republic of Germany to pay for these installations, to underwrite the capital expenditure of their utilities to provide the facilities we need to maintain forces in Europe?

I suggest that I do not know the answer to this question, but all I know for certain is the Armed Services Committee of this House and the Appropriations Committee of this House when they appropriate and spend and the authorizing committee authorizes the expenditures of a billion dollars of American taxpayers' money that it is appropriate that we provide these answers.

Whether or not it ever has a positive effect on the anthracite coal industry I will never know, but we should know whether or not American coal can better compete with Soviet gas and whether or not it just may be in our national interest to allow it to occur.

Mr. Speaker, I close with only one suggestion of how important this is. Back in 1979 it was this Congress and the President that denied the Caterpillar Corp. from selling tractors and equipment to help build that Soviet pipeline that now the military installations of the United States are one of the largest customers. I wonder why it was of such strategic importance as to now allow American workers to be employed and manufacture the equipment that would have built the pipeline, but it is not of strategic importance or national interest to the United States to be the major customer of that pipeline.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that somebody owes an explanation to the American people, but before any explanation can be given or had it requires analysis.

I think the one thing we are guilty of and lacking most of in this Congress and in this administration is proper analysis to arrive at long-term practical decisions in the expenditures of taxpayers' money, and most particularly in the defense budget of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I include the following correspondence:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, April 7, 1988.

Hon. LES ASPIN,
Chairman, Committee on Armed Services, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As you are aware, Congressman Thomas Foglietta and I met with senior U.S. Air Force and Army command officers in West Germany, on March 25, 26, and 28, to discuss their past experiences and future plans with conversions from on-base heating plants to district heating facilities operated, in many instances, by local West German municipalities. I am writing to report on various aspects of these discussions and to raise several concerns which I believe the Armed Services Committee should address before any further conversions to district heating are authorized by your Committee.

At the outset, let me say that I went to West Germany primarily concerned over the negative impact these district heating conversions is having upon the anthracite coal industry which is centered in my Congressional District. I was also concerned over on-base security questions at our European military installations arising from conversions to heating systems that rely, in part, on Soviet natural gas.

I want to make it clear, however, that I left my discussions in West Germany with U.S. Army and Air Force personnel with much broader concerns over basic policy questions which may not have been adequately addressed either at the Pentagon or by the Congress of the United States.

This letter report focuses on:

(1) the economic benefits U.S. military conversions in West Germany provide to the Soviet Union by making additional Western hard currencies available to the Soviets,

(2) the economic competitive advantage the Army is providing to the West German economy over the American economy through U.S. taxpayer financed improvements to West German local infrastructures, now and over the long term,

(3) security integrity questions at the individual Army installations,

(4) flaws in the Army's life-cycle cost analyses used to evaluate district heating conversions,

(5) possible contracting irregularities in granting sole-source, non-competitive contracts to implement district heating policy,

(6) the possible inappropriate application of the host country requirement provisions under Sec. 2690 to Title 10 U.S.C.,

(7) the lack of effective opportunities for American companies to participate in the construction activities associated with upgrading and modernizing West German municipal district heating plants associated with U.S. military contracts, and

(8) the negative impact the district heating conversions impose on several U.S. industries.

A summary of these issues and concerns is provided below.

BENEFITS TO THE SOVIET UNION THROUGH THE PROVISION OF HARD CURRENCIES

To date, approximately 90 district heating contracts have been entered into by the Army with West German municipalities, which, when implemented, will result in the elimination of 211 Army on-base heating plants. According to the Army, once the conversions are completed, 40 percent of the total heating for Army facilities will be dependent upon the use of natural gas. The Air Force has apparently also entered into district heating contracts, however, to date, their number is much smaller than the Army's.

Somewhere between 20-35 percent of West Germany's natural gas purchases currently are derived from the Soviet gas pipeline. The remainder comes primarily from the North Sea. When pressed on the question of the natural gas reserves in the North Sea, Army officials acknowledged that there is currently only an 8 to 15 year North Sea natural gas supply. It is reasonable to assume that as North Sea gas reserves are exhausted, West German purchases of Soviet natural gas will increase over the next 8 to 15 years.

Aside from the obvious base security questions of increasing our dependence on municipal heating systems that rely in part on Soviet gas, it was particularly disturbing for me to learn that our increasing indirect purchases of Soviet natural gas is apparently occurring in the absence of any overall policy consideration of the economic benefits the Soviet Union derives by obtaining hard currencies from the West through our purchases of Soviet gas. These currencies are indirectly derived from U.S. taxpayers through our military's purchases of heat generated by West German municipal district heat plants using Soviet natural gas. It is well understood that the Soviet Union desires Western hard currencies.

This apparent policy incongruity is made even more obvious when we recall that the U.S. Congress adopted legislation preventing the U.S.-based Caterpillar Co. from participating in the construction of the Soviet natural gas pipeline. When Congressman Foglietta and I asked, no reason was offered on why the military believes it is acceptable to indirectly purchase natural gas from a pipeline that the Congress barred a U.S. firm from assisting in constructing.

I strongly believe that a policy determination is necessary at the highest Administration levels and by the U.S. Congress on whether it is in this country's best interests to indirectly provide Western hard currencies to the Soviet Union. Further conversions increasing U.S. military dependence upon Soviet natural gas and increasing the flow of hard currencies to the Soviet Union should be halted until the Pentagon and the Congress have adopted a clear policy position on this important question.

This unresolved policy question, and recent related developments in West Germany raise the even broader question of the need for, and the posture of, the U.S. armed forces in Europe today. In our conversations in West Germany it appears that the West German economy is increasing its ties and interdependence with the Soviet Union. To date, the justification for the very large U.S. commitment of armed forces in Europe, and the attendent expenses, has been to protect against the Soviet threat. The increasing economic interdependence of European countries with the Soviet Union, raises the crucial basic question of why are we spending our defense tax dollars to defend countries against the Soviet Union when these same countries are increasing their economic ties to the Soviets.

The nature and magnitude of the Soviet threat seems to have become confused recently in both Europe and the United States. Consequently our defense posture and West Germany's economic posture (especially as it affects U.S. base security) appears increasingly schizophrenic and possibly in need of fundamental re-evaluation.

ECONOMIC COMPETITIVE ADVANTAGE PROVIDED TO WEST GERMANY

Under the provisions of the Army's district heating contracts, the United States pays for at least its pro rata share of the capital investments made to German Municipal district heating plants over a period of ". . . up to 10 years". In fact, it has been suggested that at least in some cases, the Army has agreed to pay for much more than its pro-rata share of the often significant capital investments needed by municipal district heating systems to accommodate the large Army demand at numerous facilities.

In our meeting with the Army, they indicated that our investment in the capital improvements to West German municipal district heating plants, under the terms of the 90 contracts which have been entered into to date, comes to about 1.2 billion deutsche marks (DM). With today's exchange rates, that equals $718,562,870. Additionally, under these 90 contracts we will pay approximately $32 million to hook Army facilities up to the municipal systems. Finally, none of this includes the actual cost for the heat that our bases will purchase under the contracts. By any standard, this is an enormous investment in West German municipal systems.

It is our understanding that there are few, if any, comparable Army commitments to underwrite significant portions of infrastructure improvements in U.S. communities where there are nearby bases. Therefore, not only does the investment by U.S. taxpayers in West German municipal district heating facilities provide an important benefit to the German economy, the Army does not even provide a similar economic benefit to U.S. communities located near domestic Army facilities.

Of additional concern is the fact that the West German government has apparently refused on at least several occasions, to assist in offsetting any of the Army's capital investment contractual requirements associated with upgrading or modernizing district heating facilities. I question either the U.S. military's commitment to gaining West German federal government participation in sharing these capital investments, or the negotiating acumen of our team in these discussions with the West German government. Given: (1) that we previously turned over ownership of our bases to the West German government, (2) that the improvements to district heating facilities will contribute substantially to the terms of any sale of these properties by the West German government should the U.S. military no longer have need for individual bases, and (3) the significant competitive advantage which the West German economy realizes from the improvements made to their basic infrastructures, it is difficult for me to understand how any effective negotiating effort could have resulted in zero West German federal government participation in defraying part of the Army's capital investment requirements under the terms of conversion contracts.

This benefit to the West German economy is further illustrated when it is understood that the Army is repaying the capital investments in 10 years or less, while the norm for private customers in West Germany is 20 to 25 years. 20 to 25 years reflects the minimum expected life of these facilities. Often the effective life is closer to 40 years. Should the U.S. close any of these Army facilities in West Germany, any savings which may be achieved following the 10 year capital cost payoff will be lost, while the benefits to the German economy will remain.

Despite the significance of the U.S. investment in West German infrastructures, Congressman Foglietta and I were unable to identify anyone who had evaluated the wisdom of this type of competitive advantage the U.S. taxpayers are providing to the West German economy. Here again, we seem to have allowed incremental, one dimensional, military decison-making to undertake projects which have a broader policy significance, without anyone having ever meaningfully evaluated or weighted the broader policy question of the competitive advantage we are providing the West German economy.

Until this issue has been thoroughly reviewed, I believe the Army should not proceed with any additional district heating contracts and the U.S. Congress should not approve any contracts currently in the pipeline.

BASE SECURITY ISSUES

Army officials assured Congressman Foglietta and me that should the Soviet Union cut off its supply of natural gas to West Germany, the West German shortfall could be met through increased purchases of North Sea gas. In addition, USAREUR officers indicated that U.S. military facilities would receive priority status for obtaining natural gas through the German distribution system.

Despite this assurance, given: (1) the heavy West German dependence on the declining North Sea gas reserves, (2) the likelihood that Soviet gas usage will increase as North Sea reserves are depleted, and (3) the expectation by the Army that our bases will rely on district heat fueled by natural gas for the next 25 years. I am unpersuaded that base security issues have been adequately addressed by the Army. In fact it is extremely disturbing that the availability of North Sea gas has been used by the Army as an answer to supply concerns when it is clear that North Sea gas reserves will be exhausted in the not distant future. Either the Army has done a grossly inadequate job of reviewing this situatiion or the Committee has been deceived on the magnitude of the problem.

In addition, I am concerned that the security of off base heating systems against terrorist or paramilitary attacks has not been adequately considered by the Army. It is my understanding that in many places access to the pipes of the distribution network is open and unsecured.

It should also be noted that the Army revealed that our military facilities are also dependent upon West German electricity, sewage, and water systems, and therefore, increasing U.S. dependence upon West German natural gas systems will not significantly alter the bases security posture. The fact that there may be additional utility security problems for our bases deficiencies.

However, in this context, when asked if the district heat conversion analyses considered that new coal-fired heating plants could easily be designed for cogeneration (which could meet U.S. base electricity needs), the Army admitted that this was not taken into consideration in either the economic savings through reduced electricity purchases or in the consideration of increased base security through safeguards against power interruptions. This suggests that cost efficiencies were not thoroughly evaluated and that steps to increase the security for our military facilities were not examined at all.

FLAWS IN THE ARMY'S LIFE-CYCLE COST ANALYSES

The General Accounting Office's 1987 report pointed out one potentially serious flaw in the economic analyses used by the Army to justify conversions to district heat—changes in the currency exchange for dollars and deutsche marks (DM).

According to the GAO, ". . . the analyses we reviewed did not accurately conduct these sensitivity analyses [for currency fluctuations], or they were not performed. Since these analyses were prepared, currency rates have changed dramatically, highlighting the importance of appropriate consideration of exchange rate variation in reaching a conclusion about the costs of alternative heating options. For example, in one case, Ayers Kaserne, we asked the Army to rerun the computer analysis correcting for several errors. . . . Given the exchange rates in effect at the time of the decision (above 2.90 DM to the dollar in September 1985), this was the proper selection because district heat was the least costly alternative whenever the exchange rates were above 2.80 DM to the dollar. However, under current exchange rates (less than 2.0 DM to the dollar), coal-fired central heating would have been the least costly alternative." [Emphasis added].

Today's exchange rate is under 1.7 DM to the dollar, further obviating the Army's economic analysis at least in this one instance.

The significance of this methodology problem in the Army's analyses should not be underestimated. Unless an accurate analysis is made, it is impossible to project the real costs or savings to the American taxpayers from these conversions. GAO's study demonstrates that with currency exchanges at their current levels, what was calculated as a savings to the taxpayer will end up costing the U.S. more than other heating options. Even if the bottomline conclusion about the cost efficiency of gas district heating is granted, the Army's "savings" have been significantly eroded by the weakening of the dollar.

POSSIBLE CONTRACTING IRREGULARITIES IN GRANTING SOLE SOURCE, NON-COMPETITIVE CONTRACTS

In our conversations with the Air Force and the Army commands in West Germany on the subject of awarding sole source contracts for the provision of district heat for our military facilities, Congressman Foglietta and I were disturbed to find that the two branches of the military apparently have very different views on when sole sourcing is allowable. Specifically, the Army views a municipal district heating facility as a "utility" for purposes of utilizing the competitive bidding exemption for utility services. The Air Force seemed to be unclear on whether a district heating operation met the legal definition of a "utility" for purposes of the competitive bidding waiver.

When meeting with Army officers in Heidelberg it was acknowledged that the vast majority of the contracts entered into thus far have been with local district heating companies and have been sole source contracts. When we asked whether the Army had obtained a legal opinion on whether the utility waiver was appropriate, the answer from Army personnel was vague and strongly suggested that, in fact, they had not sought a legal opinion on the question.

We also asked who had made the decision that sole sourcing was permitted. In the ensuing conversation it was stated that this question had not been run through the Army's contracting headquarters in the Pentagon, as apparently is required under Army regulations, and that the decision was exclusively made within the Heidelberg command.

The issue of whether sole source contracts were appropriate in a number of the Army's contracts is an important one which should be resolved before either the Army or the Air Force proceed with any additional sole source commitments. Similarly, I believe that past Army contracts in this area should be carefully reviewed for any possible appropriate corrective actions.

POSSIBLE INAPPROPRIATE APPLICATION OF THE HOST COUNTRY REQUIREMENT PROVISIONS UNDER SEC. 2690 OF TITLE 10 U.S.C.

Another area of apparent disagreement between the Army and the Air Force centers on the appropriate application of the host country requirement provisions under Sec. 2690 of Title 10 U.S.C. As you are aware, subparagraph (b) of this section states:

"(b) The Secretary of a military department may not convert a heating facility at a United States military installation in Europe from a coal-fired facility to an oil fired facility or to any other energy source facility, unless the Secretary

(1) determines that the conversion (A) is required by the government of the country in which the facility is located, or (B) is cost effective over the life cycle of the facility, and

The Air Force, in the case of West Germany, apparently believes that the application of this provision requires that the federal government in Bonn must impose the conversion requirement. This view is not shared by the Army.

In our conversation with Army personnel they indicated that they had a file full of letters from local governments requiring the Army to make many of the conversions which have been contracted for to date. When we asked whether they had received any communications from Bonn on these conversions, the Army indicated that in no case had the federal government in Bonn taken any action requiring the Army to convert.

In our further discussions on this point we asked if there was some peculiarity in West Germany law which allowed local municipal governments to de facto speak for the federal government in requiring these conversions. Army personnel indicated that they were not aware of any provision in German law to this effect. Once again, Congressman Foglietta and I asked whether a legal opinion had been sought to clarify this question and the answer again was that they had not sought or received legal counsel on this issue.

This is an extremely important question as a great many of the conversion requests submitted to your Committee by the Army for approval use this provision of U.S. law as justification for the conversions. I do not know whether these same conversions could have been justified on life cycle cost efficiency grounds. As the GAO report, cited above, suggests, however, using corrected methodology at least one conversion could not be justified on life cycle cost efficiency grounds.

Nevertheless, I believe that the critical issue is that the Army appears to have incorrectly justified, in their submissions to the Congress, a large number of conversions based on a misapplication of the host nation requirement provision of Sec. 2690 of Title 10 U.S.C. This issue should be resolved before any additional conversions citing this provision are approved by your Committee. In addition, the prior approvals made by your Committee should be re-evaluated to determine whether corrective actions are necessary.

AMERICAN COMPANIES LACK EFFECTIVE OPPORTUNITIES TO PARTICIPATE IN THE CONSTRUCTION ASSOCIATED WITH THE MODERNIZATION OF WEST GERMAN DISTRICT HEATING PLANTS NECESSITATED BY U.S. MILITARY CONTRACTS

Another issue raised in Congressman Foglietta's and my meeting with Army staff in Heidelberg related to the procedures used to contract with construction companies to undertake work on upgrading and modernizing West German municipal district heating facilities. Often substantial work has been required so that local district heat companies have the ability to fulfill their contractual commitments to provide heat to U.S. military facilities in West Germany.

According to the Army staff, under the terms of a NATO treaty which the U.S. is a signatory of, the contracting of work of this nature is handled by the host government. Under the system utilized in West Germany, U.S. companies do not have effective opportunities to bid to do the necessary construction work. Unquestionably, there are U.S. based companies with European offices who have the technical expertise to do this work. I believe it would be appropriate for your Committee to investigate this situation and renew the terms of any applicable treaties. If it is established that the situation described above is accurate, this may be an area in which the U.S. may seek treaty renegotiations.

DISTRICT HEATING CONVERSIONS NEGATIVELY IMPACT SEVERAL U.S. INDUSTRIES

As we have discussed in the past, the Army's purchases of U.S. anthracite coal account for 10-25% of the industry's total sales. The conversions to district heating in Europe already contracted for by the Army will result in a significant reduction in the Army's utilization of anthracite coal. In addition, a number of the Army's facilities converted from coal to district heating also used bituminous coal.

There are several promising developments on the horizon for new anthracite coal sales to larger West German utilities once the current West German subsidies for West German coal expire in the 1990's. Despite the Army's allegations that coal will virtually be unburnable in West Germany under that country's new environmental laws, we were informed that this view is not shared by many large West German firms who are currently implementing modern coal combustion technologies and plan to continue using coal as a fuel source in the future.

The anthracite industry's sales to the Army represents a significant portion of its overall business. Unfortunately, the loss of a major portion of these sales to the Army, as a result of its conversions to district heat, raises serious questions over the industry's ability to survive until the West German coal subsidies expire. This situation has been made all the more frustrating in light of the serious questions which have been raised on the accuracy of the Army's life cycle cost analyses of the district heating option, and the potential contracting errors discussed above.

While I am less conversant on the specific problems facing other U.S. industries, it is clear that a significant reduction of the Army's purchase of U.S. coal will negatively affect. (1) the U.S. maritime industry which is involved in the shipment of U.S. coal to American bases in Europe, (2) the U.S. rail industry which transports the coal to American ports, and (3) American workers at U.S. ports through which American coal is shipped.

CONCLUSION

Given the very serious policy and procedural issues raised above, together with the very important negative impact on several sectors of the U.S. economy associated with the conversions of U.S. military bases in Europe to local district heating facilities. I believe the Armed Services Committee should not approve any additional conversions of U.S. overseas bases to district heating until a thorough review of all of these questions has been completed.

In addition, I believe your Committee should carefully review all of the previous submissions for district heating conversions which have previously come before your Committee to determine if there were any irregularities, and if so, what corrective steps are appropriate.

The fact that national policy has not been well articulated in these areas is especially troubling to me. The absence of clear policy guidance may well explain how our military command personnel in Europe have allowed the problems cited in this report to arise in the first place. Without direction, how are our military officers in Europe supposed to determine what actions best serve the overall interests of the United States? I believe that Congress must have a central role in resolving these basic policy questions.

I would be happy to provide you with whatever assistance I can in these undertakings. If you need any additional information or have any questions concerning the meetings Congressman Foglietta and I had with U.S. military commands in Europe, please do not hesitate to let me know.

Sincerely,

PAUL E. KANJORSKI,
Member of Congress.

H.R. 4264

By Mr. KANJORSKI:

—At the end of part B of title III of division A (page 41, after line 17), insert the following:

SEC. 316. STUDY ON CONVERSION TO DISTRICT, DIRECT NATURAL GAS AND OTHER HEATING SYSTEMS IN WEST GERMANY.

(a) In General.—The Secretary of Defense, in conjunction with the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce, shall conduct a study of—

(1) the extent of, and the justification for, the economic benefits to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics that result from the conversion of United States military installations in the Federal Republic of Germany to district heat and direct natural gas systems which utilize Soviet-supplied natural gas;

(2) the extent of, and the justification for, the economic benefits that the United States military is providing to the economy of the Federal Republic of Germany by assisting in financing the development and expansion of district heating facilities and by entering into long-term contracts to purchase heat from West German district heating facilities;

(3) the extent to which the Department of Defense enters into the kind of arrangements described in paragraph (2) with State and local governments and private businesses located near military installations in the United States;

(4) the national security implications of—

(A) relying on natural gas from the Soviet Union as a source of heating fuel for United States military installations in Europe, particularly the consequences of a supply interruption from the Soviet Union;

(B) relying on natural gas from Libya as a source of heating fuel for United States military installations in Europe, particularly the consequences of a supply interruption from Libya;

(C) the length of time before natural gas supplies from the North Sea are depleted and the resulting increase in reliance on natural gas supplies from the Soviet Union and Libya; and

(D) the level of security provided to district heat facilities and the potential for supply interruptions to United States military installations as a result of terrorist activities;

(5) the accuracy of the Department of the Army's life-cycle cost analysis used to evaluate conversions from existing hearing systems in Europe to district heat and other alternatives, particularly its exchange rates and predictions for the cost of heat provided by district heat facilities;

(6) the policy implications of granting sole-source contracts for district heat facilities in Europe and of the subsequent reliance by United States military installations on only one source for heating when the conversions are complete;

(7) whether the requirements of section 2690 of title 10, United States Code, are being violated by district heat, direct natural gas or other fuel conversions which rely on requirements by local governments rather than by the national government; and

(8) whether companies of the United States are being given an opportunity to participate in or bid on construction and modernization of the heat facilities in Europe which will receive assistance from the United States government.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than February 1, 1989, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the study conducted under subsection (a).

(c) RESTRICTION ON CONVERSIONS.—Beginning on April 14, 1988, and ending on July 1, 1989, neither the Secretary of Defense nor the Secretaries of the military departments may enter into or implement any agreement or contract to convert a heating facility at a military installation outside the United States to district heat, direct natural gas, or other sources of fuel.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HON. ROBERT W. DAVIS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. DAVIS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, at the administration's request, I am today introducing legislation which would authorize appropriations for certain maritime programs within the Department of Transportation. While I have cosponsored, with a number of my colleagues, a bill which would make some modifications to the administration's draft proposal, I believe introduction of their proposal will serve a useful purpose in that the authorizing committee can focus their concerns more precisely and obtain a legislative solution of the differences which now exist. These differences, particularly in the treatment of the State academies, pose difficult but not insurmountable problems—but they are problems which I believe the administration understands and will, of course, strive to address.

I insert the following section-by-section analysis of the draft bill prepared by the Department of Transportation following my remarks:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

A bill to authorize appropriations for the fiscal years 1989 and 1990 for certain maritime programs of the Department of Transportation, and for other purpose.

Section 209 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, ("Act"), states that after December 31, 1967, there are authorized to be appropriated for certain maritime activities of the Department of Transportation only such sums as the Congress may specifically authorize by law. The draft bill authorizes appropriations for those activities listed in section 209 for which the Department of Transportation proposes to seek appropriations for fiscal years 1989 and 1990.

"Sec. 2. Funds are authorized to be appropriated without fiscal year limitation, as the Appropriation Act may provide for the use of the Department of Transportation, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989, as follows:"

Authorizes specific amounts to be appropriated for fiscal year 1989 for the following activities.

"(1) For payment of obligations incurred for operating-differential subsidy, not to exceed $248,900,000;"

"(2) Upon enactment of operating-differential subsidy reform legislation, not to exceed $202,370,000 for payment of obligations incurred for operating-differential subsidy under existing contracts, and not to exceed $72,920,000 for new agreements authorized by such legislation;" and

Operating-differential subsidy (ODS) is based upon the difference between U.S. and foreign vessel operating costs and paid to promote the maintenance of a U.S.-flag merchant fleet capable of providing essential shipping services in the U.S. foreign commerce. Operators receiving ODS must operate U.S.-flag vessels manned by American crews.

An estimated $248,900,000 appropriation to liquidate contract authority for ODS will be required under current legislation for U.S.-flag operations in 1989. This requested amount would provide for ongoing support of 81 liner and 23 bulk vessels. Upon enactment of ODS Reform legislation, the Administration will transmit a budget amendment for consideration by the Appropriations Committees to amend the appropriation bill to provide for the new program. The budget amendment would include $202,370,000 for payment of obligations incurred for operating-differential subsidy under existing contracts, and $72,920,000 for new agreements authorized by such legislation. Thus, enactment of each of these amounts is proposed as a ceiling should the authorization bill precede ODS Reform legislation.

"(3) For expenses necessary for operations and training activities, not to exceed $74,100,000; including:"

Operations and training activities include salaries and other expenses for the following:

"(a) For maritime education and training expenses, not to exceed $32,021,000; including not to exceed $22,759,000 for maritime training at the Merchant Marine Academy at Kings Point, New York, $8,000,000 for financial assistance to state maritime academies, and $1,262,000 for expenses necessary for additional training;"

The 1989 maritime education and training program (Title XIII of the Act) encompasses operation of the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy, continuing assistance to six state maritime academies, and additional training for eligible merchant marine personnel.

Funding requested for the Merchant Marine Academy will provide an additional $1,850,000 for renovation of the heating system and other facility repairs. The first phase of heating system renovation was proposed in the 1988 Budget, but funds were not appropriated.

The state maritime academies program assists states in the education and training of individuals for service as officers in the U.S. merchant marine. Historically, assistance has been provided to participating states (California, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, New York, and Texas) in the form of direct payments to the academies, incentive payments to cadets, and maintenance and repair of ships on loan for use as training ships. Pursuant to the President's Budget, the incentive payments to cadets will be phased out, and the other assistance provided will be limited to those schools that enter into the agreement provided by section 5 of the draft bill. Unlike the 1987 and 1988 budgets, the Administration is not proposing elimination of Federal financial support to the state maritime academies. Two changes in the program are proposed in order to enhance the Federal return on investment and strengthen the Federal commitment to the program. These are (a) sharing of training ships which would avoid future ship replacement costs, and (b) replacement of the Student Incentive Payment (SIP) Program with a more meaningful commitment applicable to all students. As SIPs are phased out, available funds would be dedicated to increased direct payments to the six academies. In addition, as a condition of receiving Federal assistance (direct payments and training ships), the State Schools would require that all graduates pass the exam for a Merchant Marine officer's license and accept, if offered, an appointment in the U.S. Naval Reserve or any other Reserve unit of an armed force of the United States.

Finally, the additional training program provides for costs of administration of the Merchant Marine Academy and state marine school programs at the headquarters level, and provides for training in shipboard firefighting, and operation and maintenance of medium and slow speed marine main propulsion diesel engines.

"(b) For national security support capabilities, not to exceed $12,299,000; including not to exceed $11,101,000 for reserve fleet expenses, and $1,198,000 for emergency planning/operations; and"

The national security support capabilities account is dedicated to meeting expenses associated with the National Defense Reserve Fleet (NDRF) and the emergency planning/operations programs. Each program is directly supportive of the Maritime Administration's national security responsibilities. The reserve fleet program provides for preservation, maintenance and security of ships in the NDRF and for administration of the ship transfer and ship disposal programs.

The NDRF comprises an inventory of ships available to meet requirements for additional shipping capacity in times of national emergency. $2 million is requested for continuation of a multi-year program to renovate and provide adequate facilities at the three national defense reserve fleet sites. The increased level of operational activity and the increased number of large ships in the NDRF and associate RRF program necessitates improvements in the reserve fleet mooring facilities and shore side support facilities to ensure efficient and effective operations and to permit their continued use. The program includes dredging at each of the fleet sites; improvements and expansion of mooring facilities at the James River Reserve Fleet site; and replacement of the crane barge at each fleet site. $500,000 was allocated to the base program from the 1988 appropriation and an additional $2 million is requested in 1989 and subsequent years to complete this program.

Under the emergency planning/operations program, the agency develops and maintains plans and procedures to ensure continuity and control of maritime operations in time of national emergency, and insures seamen and private shipping against loss in time of war.

"(c) For other operations and training expenses, not to exceed $29,780,000; and"

Funding authorized under the category of "other operations and training expenses" provides for the direction and administration of other Agency programs and for program costs not separately authorized. The request reflects an increase of $1,000,000 over and above amounts previously appropriated for technical and program studies in fiscal year 1988, such that this activity shall have a total of $2,000,000 in fiscal years 1989 and 1990. This additional funding is required to provide a firm expression of Government interest in support of cooperative programs of the maritime community, especially when major funds are contributed from other sources, and for policy and program studies to improve the management of maritime-related Government programs.

"(4) For necessary expenses to acquire and maintain a surge shipping capability in the National Defense Reserve Fleet in an advanced state of readiness and related programs, not to exceed $110,751,000."

The request provides funding for the Ready Reserve Force (RRF), which is comprised of laid up Government-owned, U.S.-flag merchant ships. The RRF is maintained in an advanced state of readiness to meet surge shipping requirements during a national emergency. The 1989 budget proposes to appropriate these funds to the Maritime Administration, which has historically managed the RRF and funded certain RRF base costs in its Operation and Training appropriation. In the past, the Navy has funded the incremental cost of advanced readiness requirements.

Section 8137 of Public Law 100-202 directed that ". . . The President shall submit in his budget proposals to the Congress for fiscal year 1989 an arrangement for the Ready Reserve Fleet in which funding and program responsibilities are consolidated in a single Federal organization . . .". The proposed 1989 consolidation will place the entire funding and program responsibility for RRF ships in one Federal agency, the Maritime Administration. Included in the request is $35,400,000 for fleet additions including both purchase of vessels and upgrade of vessels already owned. In addition, $75,351,000 is requested for maintenance and operations. This includes funds required for ship activation, maintenance and berthing, and special projects.

"SEC. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated without fiscal year limitation, as the Appropriation Act may provide for the use of the Department of Transportation, such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1990, to carry out the activities provided for in section 2 of this Act."

This section authorizes to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1990 in accordance with 31 U.S.C. 1106.

"SEC. 4. Title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (46 App. U.S.C. 1271-1279c) is amended by the addition of a new section 1111 as follows: 'Sec. 1111. The authority of the Secretary to enter into a new commitment to guarantee the payment of the interest on, and the unpaid balance of the principal of, any obligation which is eligible to be guaranteed under this title, shall expire on September 30, 1988'."

Section 4 of the draft bill would amend Title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (46 App. U.S.C. 1271-1279c) to implement the President's fiscal year 1989 budget request for no new Title XI loan guarantee commitments in 1989 and beyond. Pursuant to the Title XI Guarantee Program, the Secretary of Transportation guarantees obligations to finance the construction, reconstruction or reconditioning of U.S.-flag vessels. The Secretary of Commerce has similar authority under that title with respect to fishing vessels and fishery facilities. The Title XI Guarantee Program is one of several Federal credit programs that the Administration proposes to reduce or phase out in order to limit the Government's intervention in the Nation's lending markets. To this end the Administration has proposed that the Secretary's authority to enter into new Title XI loan guarantee commitments shall expire after fiscal year 1988.

"Sec. 5. Section 1304 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (46 App. U.S.C. 1295c), is amended as follows:

"(1) In subsection (d) by striking 'an amount equal to', and substituting '$400,000' for '$100,000';

"(2) In subsection (f) by: (a) striking 'and' after the semicolon in subparagraph (A); and (b) striking the period at the end of subparagraph (B), and inserting the following: '; and (C) after the date of enactment of this subparagraph, agree in writing to require each U.S. citizen entering the academy in a merchant marine officer preparation program, as a condition for graduation, to (i) pass the examination administered by the United States Coast Guard required for issuance of a merchant marine officer license and (ii) apply for an appointment as, accept if tendered an appointment as, and agree to serve as a commissioned officer in the United States Naval Reserve (including the Merchant Marine Reserve, United States Naval Reserve), the United States Coast Guard Reserve, or any other reserve unit of an armed force of the United States, for at least six years following the date of graduation from such state maritime academy of such individual.'; and

"(3) In subsection (g), by the addition to paragraph (7) of the following: 'The authority of the Secretary to enter into an agreement under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall expire on September 30, 1988'."

Section 5 of the draft bill would amend section 1304 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (46 App. U.S.C. 1295c) as follows:

Subsection (d) would be amended so that reprogrammed SIP funds could be added to the direct payments to these schools.

Subsection (f) would be amended to implement the President's budget recommendation that as a condition of Federal assistance (the Federal payments as well as the availability of training ships) to the state maritime academies, such academies must require all candidates entering a merchant marine officer preparation program to pass the examination administered by the United States Coast Guard required for issuance of a merchant marine officer license as a condition for graduation, and to apply for and accept, if offered, appointment as a commissioned officer in the United States Coast Guard Reserve, or any other reserve unit of an armed force of the United States, for at least six years following the date of graduation from the State maritime academy of such individual. The purpose of this amendment is to make all state school graduates available as licensed merchant marine officers for purposes of mobilization in a national emergency.

Section (g) would be amended to terminate the authority of the Secretary to enter into Student Incentive Payments after September 30, 1988.

"Sec. 6. Section 362(b) of title 11, United States Code is amended as follows:

"(a) Paragraph (12) is amended by striking 'which was brought', and inserting 'brought or to be brought'; and

"(b) The freestanding paragraph following paragraph (13) is amended by striking 'paragraphs (12) and (13)', and inserting 'paragraph (13)'; and at the end by inserting: 'The rights of the Secretary of Transportation under paragraph (12) shall not be affected or enjoined by any court.' "

Section 6 of the draft bill would amend section 362(b) of title 11, United States Code, concerning bankruptcy. Prior to the enactment of Public Law 99-509, approved October 21, 1986, the Departments of Transportation and Commerce, as mortgagees under the Title XI Guarantee Program, were unable to take timely foreclosure action on a defaulted Title XI mortgage, because almost all of the defaulted Title XI vessels were being operated by their owners under the protection of the bankruptcy courts. Those vessels were being operated in most cases with no capital cost to cover, because the owners had defaulted and the mortgages had been paid off. Their continued operation was causing significant injury to the remainder of the industry, including those Title XI operators who continued to honor their financial commitments. Section 5001 of Public Law 99-509, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986, amended section 362(b) of title 11, United States Code, by the addition of a paragraph (12), concerning the Secretary of Transportation, and a paragraph (13), concerning the Secretary of Commerce, so that after 90 days they would have the authority to foreclose on a defaulted mortgage even though the mortgagor was in bankruptcy. These 1986 amendments to the bankruptcy code will expire by their terms on December 31, 1989.

Section 362(b)(12) has proved beneficial to the Department of Transportation in the negotiation of Title XI claims with debtors in bankruptcy, and has been applied reasonably and fairly with respect to debtors and their respective competitors. For these reasons, the Department believes that the authority vested in the Secretary under section 362(b)(12) should be made permanent. To this end, the draft bill would delete the 1989 termination date with respect to paragraph (12) that is set forth in the freestanding paragraph following paragraph (13).

Although section 362(b)(12) has been helpful to the maritime industry and the Department of Transportation, there have been a number of occasions when the bankruptcy courts have evidenced a certain confusion in construing the Congressional purpose of this new provision. More particularly, one bankruptcy court mistakenly concluded that the Secretary's rights under section 362(b)(12) only applied to admiralty foreclosures that had been commenced by the Secretary prior to the debtor's filing for bankruptcy. The draft bill would clarify this misunderstanding by a suitable amendment to paragraph (12). Other bankruptcy courts have asserted their bankruptcy authority to reimpose the automatic stay or further stay the Secretary from exercising his authority under section 362(b)(12). The draft bill would remedy this situation by the addition of the following sentence to the freestanding paragraph following paragraph (13): "The rights of the Secretary of Transportation under paragraph (12) shall not be affected or enjoined by any court."

TAX REFORM WAS NOT

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, as we pass through the second tax paying season since the enactment of the "Tax Reform Act of 1986," most American taxpayers—including those employed by the Internal Revenue Service—remain bewildered and befuddled about the new Tax Code which this body enacted into law under the guise of simplification and reform.

Since the enactment of the 1986 tax bill, I've received a steady flow of communications from my constituents expressing confusion, dissatisfaction, and anger over the new tax laws.

It is clear, as I predicted in December 1986, that the majority of American households have not benefited from the new tax laws. There is also no evidence that the Federal Government has benefited from the new tax laws. I was among the minority of Congressmen who opposed the Tax Reform Act of 1986 and I remain convinced that its enactment was not in the best interests of our Nation. I was pleased to read Judy Mann's column in the Washington Post, April 15, 1988, "They Call This Tax Reform." I recommend this article to my colleagues as it highlights some of the reasons I voted against the tax bill of 1986.

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 15, 1988]

THEY CALL THIS TAX REFORM?

(By Judy Mann)

There is always some risk in attempting to apply business principles to the conduct of government, very much like there is some risk in applying moral principles to the conduct of business. Nonetheless, it is sometimes useful to superimpose an alien framework on a specific situation if for no other reason than to indulge in a fantasy.

Thus, consider what would happen if you were the majority shareholder in a corporation and you and your managers had agreed on a goal and you instructed them to go about implementing it. The goal in this case was to build a car that would cost less and be easier to operate and service than the old model your company had been producing.

That old model had started out sleek and trim, but as each new class of engineers came into the factory they'd added their own bells and whistles and in time the company product was so laden down with frills and widgets that nobody but a mechanic could figure out how to operate it. Obviously, this wasn't good for business because very few consumers wanted to buy something they couldn't operate. So your management redesigned the product, retooled the plant and for the next model year produced an Automotive Reform.

Only there was this little glitch.

The product of your Automotive Reform fell short on two salient points; it cost consumers more and it was even harder to operate than before. What would you do? Well, in Detroit you might give your management a bonus, but in the free market place, where people's careers are supposed to be at least remotely tied to their company's performance, more likely you'd give them the boot.

What brings this to mind in a column appearing on April 15 is the Tax Reform Act, which is looking more and more like one of the biggest frauds ever perpetrated on the American public by those coconspirators, Congress and the Internal Revenue Service. The idea was to lower taxes and to simplify the procedure under which citizens were separated from their hard-earned income each year.

Congress and the administration had a clear mandate; the only person who talked repeatedly about raising taxes, Walter Mondale, was last seen in Minnesota. Thus, for much of 1985 and 1986 tax revision dominated the headlines as the country's managers—that is, Congress and the administration—set about the task of producing a product that is less costly, fairer to the taxpayers and simpler to use.

What they came up with makes the Edsel look like a fine-tuned automotive wonder.

To be fair, there seems to be agreement that poor people did well as a result of tax revision because many of them are now exempt from paying taxes. The only other people I know of who have benefitted under the Tax Reform Act, however, are President Reagan and his wife Nancy, who are getting a $10,754 refund, which they are applying to their 1988 tax bill. The Reagans paid 25.1 percent in taxes on income of $345,359 for 1987, down from 27.5 percent in 1986 and 31.1 percent in 1985.

A lot of married couples who have two good incomes got torpedoed under tax revision: they lost the hard-won tax deduction for married couples that was designed to alleviate the marriage penalty and they also lost the tax exemption for Individual Retirement Accounts. Some did better because the rates went down.

But a majority of the public appears to agree that tax revision is costing them more money and is more confusing to the taxpayers than ever before, if this, in fact, is possible. A Washington Post-ABC news poll taken in March showed that nearly six out of 10 people think their taxes are higher and half of them said the forms were more difficult to fill out this year.

Timing is everything, however, particularly when you are polling people about their income taxes. By this week, a USA Today-CNN poll showed that 85 percent of the people polled think the new tax law is harder to figure, 67 percent said it was more confusing and more than 60 percent think it is benefiting the rich and the special interests.

News accounts are quoting some of the tax revision engineers on the Hill as saying it is going to take some time to get used to. Old Mr. Heart, himself, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), who as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee was a principal engineer in this, told USA Today: "You can't make a judgment about how good or bad it is until [you] go through the exercise one or two times."

Perhaps not, but the first spin around the block in this lemon has left people reeling and mad, and it is probably a very good thing for any number of congressional careers that elections are held in November and not now.

DRUG CRIME WHISTLEBLOWER PROTECTION ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1988

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced legislation to provide greater assistance to people who provide information on drug offenses. One of the difficulties we have in dealing with drug abuse is the immense profits that can be made by becoming involved in drug dealing. A blessing and curse of our free enterprise system is that people are often driven by the profit motive. Poor young people living in our Nation's ghettos may not want to become involved in drug dealing, but they are often intoxicated by the great sums of money to be had.

The Drug Crime Whistleblower Assistance Act of 1988, which I have introduced would encourage cooperation with law enforcement authorities in the war against drugs by increasing the maximum reward from the Justice Department forfeiture fund and the Customs forfeiture fund to 50 percent of the amount realized by the United States. Currently, the Justice Department reward program is capped at the lesser of $150,000 or one-fourth of the amount realized by the United States from the property forfeited. The Customs cap is $250,000. That's peanuts when compared with the incredible money being made by drug pushers on the streets of America.

This bill would put substantial profit motives on the side of turning in people and providing information on drug offenses. Someone could provide evidence on a drug crime, and have the possibility of getting a great sum of money, and could then be assisted by Federal programs to provide protection to State witnesses. They could even get another identity, if need be.

It is not unheard of for drug dealers to have millions of dollars in assets. If someone, particularly a young, poor person, could expect to get a large share of such assets perhaps he or she would turn States evidence, rather than turn to drug dealing. That would be in the best interest of the problem.

This bill follows in the tradition of our free enterprise system, and could make a considerable dent in the great drug problem we now have. It also would tend to imperil the most powerful drug merchants more than small fry.

The war on drugs needs imaginative solutions. Of course we need better education, better drug interdiction. And maybe we're missing a point. Maybe what we also need is a good old American motive—the profit motive.

GLENDALE BAR ASSOCIATION CELEBRATES LAW DAY WITH THE HONORABLE MALCOLM LUCAS, CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, each year at this time I take a moment to announce to my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives the annual Law Day celebration of the Glendale, CA, Bar Association, which is part of the national celebration of Law Day USA 1988—"Legal Literacy."

While each event is important and special, this years April 29 Law Day has special luster because the keynote speaker is the Honorable Malcolm Lucas, chief justice of the California Supreme Court. I know the members of the Glendale Bar Association look forward to the remarks of the chief justice with as much anticipation as I do.

As many of my colleagues know, Law Day was the idea of Charles Rhyne, former president of the American Bar Association. This idea became a national tradition in 1958, when President Eisenhower proclaimed:

> It is fitting that the American people should remember with pride and vigilantly guard the great heritage of liberty, justice and equality under law. * * * It is our moral and civic obligation as free men and as Americans to preserve and strengthen that great heritage.

Mr. Speaker one must be especially unseeing these days to not notice a certain raveling of the social fabric, which threatens our great heritage of liberty and provides a preview of the chaos that results from casual observance of the law. In a democratic society, liberty and freedom are insured only so long as each of us obeys all the laws both grand and mundane.

Law Day celebrations remind Americans of the essential role law plays in securing our safety and liberty within our homes, communities and national borders. If we take the law for granted, we take these rights for granted. If our respect for law dims, the brightness of liberty dims.

All Law Day celebrations, including the April 29 event sponsored by the Glendale Bar Association, promote respect for law which is absolutely fundamental in a democratic society because a law without respect is no law at all.

WORLD POPULATION AWARENESS WEEK

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Miss SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, because April 17 through April 23, 1988, is being recognized as World Population Awareness Week, I would like to submit for the RECORD a proclamation signed by Gov. Edward DiPrete of the State of Rhode Island. This proclamation reflects the sentiments of my fellow Rhode Islanders in recognizing the importance of population control for the future of the world's human and natural resources. As a member of the Congressional Coalition on Population and Development, I fully support the work of the Population Institute and other organizations in educating the world about the problem of rapid population growth. As Governor DiPrete's proclamation points out, the United States is in a unique position to help millions of people in developing countries obtain access to much needed and desired family planning services.

The text of the proclamation follows:

PROCLAMATION

Whereas, during the week of April 17-23, 1988, the citizens of the State of Rhode Island will observe World Population Awareness Week; and

Whereas, Rhode Islanders are sensitive to the recent great increase in human numbers and recognize that the growing population has caused a need for development of extensive new resources; and

Whereas, the people of the Ocean State have a great concern for all those who have endured deprivation of nourishment, relief or adequate facilities; and

Whereas, the prosperity of America has enabled the citizens of this nation to be among the most capable of assisting, providing and devising ways and means to sufficiently deal with the growing world population; and

Whereas, in order to avert the disastrous consequences that unchecked population growth portends, awareness must be increased about the importance of extending family planning services to the millions of people who need and want them;

Now, therefore, I, Edward D. DiPrete, Governor of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, do hereby proclaim April 17-23, 1988, as "World Population Awareness Week" in the State of Rhode Island and call on all citizens to join with me in taking cognizance of the burdens of those who suffer due to overpopulation.

COUNCIL ON HEMISPHERIC AFFAIRS ARTICLE ON MANIGAT

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to the attention of my colleagues an article put forth by the Council on Hemispheric Affairs regarding United States policy toward Haiti. The Council on Hemispheric Affairs provides useful and insightful information on events and politics in the Western Hemisphere.

This particular article concerning Haiti is authored by Jacqueline Samuda, a research associate with the Council on Hemispheric Affairs here in Washington, DC.

TWO MONTHS INTO MANIGAT'S RULE

(By Jacqueline Samuda)

As the internal political opposition and the international community watch to see what steps former political science professor Leslie Manigat will take to bring the country back under civilian control, Washington policy analysts are speculating on the nature of the new Haitian president's relationship with the military. Will he be a Jose Napoleon Duarte of El Salvador, who has established an entirely dependent working relationship with the military; or a doughty Vinicio Cerezo of Guatemala, who reigns but is not allowed to rule, as he continues an uneasy alliance with the country's armed forces?

Already, Manigat, nicknamed "Manidoc," has shown himself to be under the thumb of the military, whose commander in chief for the next three years is Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy, the head of the now discredited National Governing Council (CNG). Manigat's appointment of former CNG member Gen. Williams Regala as defense minister is critical in that it guarantees that the same military cast of characters who ruled the country through the CNG will continue to play a dominant role in Haitian politics. Moreover, both the appointment of Regala, who is the key link to the country's old-guard military, and Manigat's reluctance to move against Col. Jean-Claude Paul, who was recently indicted by a federal grand jury in Miami on drug-trafficking charges, confirm what many Haitian observers all along have maintained: the shrewd former professor was hand-picked by members of the CNG to rule in its interests, and that a deal was worked out late last year in which Regala would get the defense ministry, and Manigat, the presidency.

In light of the recently concluded hearings into drug-trafficking presided over by Sen. John Kerry (D-MA), there now is more than passing interest in the extent to which senior Haitian government and military officials have been involved with narco-trafficking, as well as how Haiti will deal with another national embarrassment—a recent shipment of toxic waste from Philadelphia that was dumped on the island. The toxic incinerator ash, which was originally represented as being fertilizer, allegedly entered the country through the connivance of two of the brothers of Col. Jean-Claude Paul, one of the country's most important military figures. In addition to his being implicated in a recent scandal involving the toxic waste, which the environmental group Greenpeace has reported as being hazardous to the health of Haitians and to the country's environment, Col. Paul also has been charged with being involved in the drug trade. The colonel commands the Dessaline Battalion which is barracked in facilities across the square from the presidential palace. Along with two other family members, he was indicted in early March by a Miami grand jury in connection with drug smuggling to the United States.

Panama, whose de facto ruler, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, was also indicted by a federal grand jury in Miami on drug trafficking charges, has born the brunt of the administration's anti-drug zeal. Its U.S. bank accounts have been frozen and Canal revenues placed in escrow; and Washington has decertified the country on the grounds that it has not taken effective action to stem the trafficking of drugs. In contrast, the administration has remained silent on the role of Haitian senior officials in narcotics dealings.

The response of Congress and the White House to the current political situation in Haiti has differed widely. On the Hill, there is concern that the issue of the fraudulent Jan. 17 election which gave Manigat his presidential victory, and Haitian policy in general, have been shifted to the back burner. A number of independent experts anticipate that several months down the line, the State Department will, as it did last summer, find that conditions in Port-au-Prince are sufficiently improved, and lobby for a resumption of U.S. aid. Indicative of Washington's attitude toward the present Haitian government and its unquestionable intentions to back it, is one State Department official's interpretation of the White House's positive attitude on the question of Manigat's legality. Shortly after the January vote, the official noted that Washington does not "recognize governments, but countries."

In a move to short-circuit the administration strategy, Representative Dante Fascell (D-FL) introduced a bill on March 15 that would impose a series of trade sanctions against the country until such time as Manigat would take steps to void the fraudulent election that brought him to power and arrange for a new ballot that would lead to a more democratic government. Among other measures, the proposal calls for the continued suspension of U.S. assistance to the Manigat government, the revocation of Haiti's 7,500 ton sugar quota and the investigation into the country's involvement in the transshipment of drugs to the U.S. market.

In Haiti, reports of disappearances and police detentions continue. In early March, three demonstrators protesting the dismissal of Minoterie Flour Mill workers were briefly arrested by the police. On March 30, it was announced that authorities arrested approximately 40 protesters who were marking the first anniversary of the country's constitution which had been approved by an overwhelming number of Haitians. Last summer, journalists began to feel pressure from the authorities as limitations were placed on their reporting, with some journalists having their cameras and other equipment confiscated. Several foreign journalists were shot, and in the case of one Dominican reporter, killed.

This trend toward increased government restrictions on the press continues under Manigat's regime and is typified by the March 7 statement of Information Minister Roger Savain attacking "inappropriate language and the dissemination of erroneous nonsensical, or unverified information." Many, including the Haitian Journalist Association, perceived the communique as a veiled warning to the press and criticized the minister for his action. In a clarification issued after the criticism, Savain claimed that "[t]here were no aggressive intentions on our part . . . we think that among friends, if we sometimes notice things that for one reason or another are not going exactly as they should, we should say: 'Hey, listen; watch out . . .'"

THE FLAG ON THE FRONT PORCH: FOR WHOM DOES IT FLY?

HON. BEN BLAZ

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. BLAZ. Mr. Speaker, among the thousands of letters and packages our offices receive each year, there are a few which stand out and deserve extra special attention. Such an example is a copyrighted piece I received from Mr. Joseph Ray, a World War II veteran from Whitesboro, NY, entitled, "The Flag on the Front Porch: For Whom Does It Fly." Mr. Ray's piece exhibits a patriotism and pride in America and the values we as Americans hold so dear—freedom, courage, tolerance, love of country.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter into the RECORD Mr. Ray's comments as a tribute to him and those he writes about.

THE FLAG ON THE FRONT PORCH: FOR WHOM DOES IT FLY?

For 239 million Americans—those who worship God in 331,065 churches (great cathedrals to leaky pinewoods chapels)—and those who stay home. For those who coldly ignore it in parades; and for those who do salute it.

For the God-fearing men whose stern rectitude moved them to rank Freedom of Religion First in the U.S. Constitution, followed by Speech, Press and Assembly.

For Jeanette Rankin, only member of the House of Representatives to vote against entering WW2; and for all who voted in favor.

For fireman Fred Burgess, of the USS Laffey, wounded in battle off Okinawa, April, 1945; his last request the ship's flag, farewell look homeward to family and country; and, clutching it to his breast, died.

For Mrs. Rosa Parks, who, with the courage of an infantryman, chose to retain her seat on the Montgomery bus in 1955.

For our astronauts who carried it 221,000 miles to the moon; and for millions of Americans who can't carry it 30 feet from closet to front porch on holidays.

For Christian and Jew: indifferent citizen and eager immigrant, believer and nonbeliever—beneficiaries all in the great experiment of Self-Government.

And it flies proudest for our Medal of Honor holders (3,394 since 1863; 247 survive today); quintessential Americans who tarried not to ask what the country could do for them, but gladly placed themselves in harm's way for love of Comrade, Flag and Country.

And it also flies for Vicente Blaz who serves it valiantly—in uniform and out!

AMERICA'S LIBERTY—OUR HERITAGE

HON. SAM GEJDENSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to share with my colleagues an essay written by Kimberly Michalski from Deep River, CT. Kimberly was the Connecticut finalist for a Veterans of Foreign Wars Voice of Democracy essay contest. Over 300,000 secondary school students participated in this contest and I am proud to have a constituent from my district as the winning Connecticut representative. The essay theme was "America's Liberty—Our Heritage."

AMERICA'S LIBERTY—OUR HERITAGE

Having grown up in America all their lives most Americans do not realize exactly how lucky they are. Some hold throughout their life a childlike adoration for their country and tend to wrap their patriotism around them like a blanket and do not consider the bad as well as the good. Others are so highly critical that they do not realize that freedoms and liberties are not common occurrences in other parts of the world.

In the Constitution of the United States of America the authors declared that the United States government was formed . . . to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity . . . and also to establish justice. In the Declaration of Independence, it states that Americans have several inalienable rights: life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. The Founding Fathers of our country stressed that it was the American people's duty to preserve, protect, and defend these rights for all members of society. Many in today's government would be quick to point out, and rightly so, that there is more equality in America today than when the Constitution was written. However, even though America has made great progress since its birth. It still has much farther to go.

Even after those two great documents were written and though the Declaration stated that all men are created equal, the theory didn't get put into practice, and afterwards, in society people soon began to realize that all men were not created equal. In that time period men did not include "blacks". Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation, which supposedly freed blacks from slavery, but it was some time before that freedom became a reality. Yet, even after that blacks were treated as inferiors. Individually and as a race, being denied voting rights as well as being discriminated against in jobs and education. As years and decades have gone by, blacks have gradually gained a greater level of equality but economically some blacks still have not fully achieved parity. Currently, in politics, with Jesse Jackson running for President many people cannot get past the color of his skin.

Eventually, as time went by women too began to protest over their lack of rights. Society as a whole was not ready to accept this plea but through enterprising women the world began to take notice of women's rights but even today in job opportunities many employers are more likely to choose a man over a woman and not on the basis of the better qualified person. When Geraldine Ferraro was running for vice-president on the democratic ticket many people expressed hesitation at the possibility of a woman holding such a high office.

Society in America is far from perfect. Economically, socially, and politically many people are still discriminated against. However, in American society we are able to press for the continued advancement of the liberties of those who lack the promises of the Declaration and the Constitution unlike in many other countries where such efforts lead to imprisonment and persecution. The fact that I am able to express my views both positive and negative is testimony that America is liberty—a liberty to be protected and perfected.

TAX FAIRNESS FOR ARTISTS

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, last week, Americans across the country dropped their completed income tax forms in the mail and celebrated the end of another tax season. But for many, who have found themselves subject to cumbersome new bookkeeping requirements, the anguish continues.

The 1986 tax overhaul included a footnote that artists, writers, photographers, and independent filmmakers were required to follow uniform capitalization rules when filing their income tax returns. This unfair and unworkable new interpretation, which has yet to be fully explained by the IRS, threatens the very livelihoods of thousands of freelance creators.

On Friday, April 15, I jointed Artists for Tax Equity, an organization formed to urge the repeal of this new interpretation of the uniform capitalization requirements, at a protest rally at the New York Public Library. The text of my remarks follows:

ARTISTS FOR TAX EQUITY RALLY, APRIL 15, 1988

I would like to thank Artists for Tax Equity for inviting me to join the chorus of voices that are demanding a return to tax fairness for the writers, photographers, artists, and independent filmmakers who were adversely affected by the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

Today, millions of Americans will fold and seal their tax returns and breathe a sigh of relief that the turmoil of tax time is over. But for innumerable individuals subject to the new "uniform capitalization" provisions of the 1986 tax reform bill, this day is yet another milestone in a journey of confusion, anger and disbelief. These Americans have no argument with paying their fair share of taxes. But the new tax law has subjected them to burdensome tax rules that may threaten their very careers.

There can be no question that some provisions of the Tax Reform Act are of benefit to low- and middle-income Americans. But the new tax law also contains many provisions that actually harm these taxpayers. When the final version of this legislation was voted on by the House of Representatives, I made clear to my colleagues that I would not support any measure that would "harm average taxpayers." In my statement, I criticized the legislation for eliminating fundamental deductions that serve legitimate needs, and I cast my vote against the tax revision plan.

However, it was difficult to predict at that time just how burdensome the Tax Reform Act would really become for 17th Congressional District residents. The 17th Congressional District contains the largest concentration of artists of all types in the entire country. Each and every one of them has been subjected to the new uniform capitalization requirement. I have heard from hundreds of you—including many who have been faced with the threat of losing your very livelihood.

Unfortunately, no corrective action has yet been taken. It has been my goal and the goal of other similarly-minded representatives to achieve a solution to this problem before the filing season for 1987 tax returns. We thought we would achieve that when corrective provisions were included in last year's omnibus budget reconciliation bill. But the correction was jettisoned before passage as a result of last year's budget summit agreement between the administration and Congressional leaders.

During those budget negotiations—convened after October's stock market crash—the administration demanded that all revenue-losing provisions be removed from the budget agreement. Thus, artists who played no role in creating our nation's federal budget crisis were asked to bear the burden for this crisis.

As a result, the uniform capitalization provision stands for the moment. Worse still, the IRS has provided no reasonable guidance to affected individuals as to how to proceed in this climate of uncertainty. Some accountants have urged their clients to comply with the new law, while others have advised them to file for an extension in the hope that a solution may be in the offing.

Luckily, there is room for optimism at this stage. The committee charged with tax issues, the House Committee on Ways and Means, is expected to meet within the next few weeks to begin consideration of corrections to the 1986 tax law. It is expected that advocates of a repeal of this new interpretation of the uniform capitalization provisions will offer an amendment to accomplish this and I would urge that it apply retroactively. If preserved in the final version passed by the House and the Senate, such an amendment would eliminate the threat of uniform capitalization for all artists, once and for all.

It is my earnest hope that this will indeed be accomplished, and that this onerous provision of the Tax Reform Act will be relegated to the legislative graveyard that it deserves to inhabit. I look forward to the day when the attention of our nation's artists, writers, photographers, and filmmakers will remain on creative expression, rather than on burdensome and unfair tax laws. And I promise to work by your side every step of the way until that day is here.

A.M.E. CHURCH ANNIVERSARY

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, next month brings the bicentennial anniversary of the African Methodist Episcopal Church. The members of the A.M.E. Church will celebrate this historic event at festivities in St. Louis, MO, the site from which the A.M.E. Church began its "westward expansion." I would like to take this opportunity to salute the congregation of the A.M.E. Church on this special occasion and to share the following proclamation in honor of the African Methodist Episcopal Church's bicentennial anniversary.

Whereas, the African Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1787, in the City of Brotherly Love, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, by a young man of African descent, RICHARD ALLEN, who responded to segregation by leading his fellow black worshippers from the restrictive environs of St. George Episcopal Church; and

Whereas, the ideologies of RICHARD ALLEN propelled the African Methodist Episcopal Church into an independent national body and established a connectional structure which has lasted, with modifications, to this day; and

Whereas, from the early beginning, African Methodists have repeatedly made a concrete impact on American Society by:

Commitment to a ministry of Liberation and Reconciliation; the liberation of persons, and the reconciliation of man with God, of person with person, of persons to history and environment and community to community to include Food Co-Ops, Outreach Centers, Women Resource Centers, Credit Unions, Travel Agencies, Substance Abuse Ministry, Teenage Pregnancy Programs, Energy Co-Ops, Deaf Ministry, Television, Radio and Book Ministries;

Remaining steadfast in the forefront of social change;

Working for the passage of legislation pertaining to the civil rights of all people; and

Whereas, the A.M.E. Church, with its great emphasis on education, has organized fifteen institutions of higher learning, with mission schools in Africa, Haiti, and the British Dominions; and

Whereas, the A.M.E. Church now expands the entire United States, Africa, England, Canada and the Caribbean, with over two million members; and

Whereas, all members of the Fourth and Fifth Episcopal Districts, under the able leadership of Bishop Henry W. Murph and Bishop Samuel S. Morris, relates of the aforementioned Districts, have joined together with Bishop Vinton R. Anderson, Chairperson of the Bicentennial Commission, to celebrate the 200th Birthday of the African Methodist Episcopal Church on May 13, 14, and 15, 1988;

Now, therefore, I William L. Clay, Congressman of the 1st Congressional District, State of Missouri do hereby proclaim May 13-15, 1988, as "African Methodist Episcopal Church Celebration Days in the City of St. Louis." The "Liberating and Reconciling People" of the African Methodist Episcopal Church have demonstrated a deep and abiding commitment to mankind. I commend the members of the A.M.E. Church for 200 years of remarkable contributions and dedicated service to society.

H. FLETCHER MARTIN

HON. CHARLES E. BENNETT

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call attention to an article, which recently appeared in the Beaches' Leader, Jacksonville Beach, FL, concerning H. Fletcher Martin. Many years ago, I practiced law in the same law firm as this very distinguished hero of World War I. He is a remarkable man in every respect, and I include this article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a tribute to him, pointing out that his regimental commander spoke of him in his service record that "The war has not produced a braver man." This tribute was deserved, and he has never let down his high standards of life. I include it herein in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

47TH INFANTRY HONORS WORLD WAR I VETERAN

(By Eleanor Snite)

Almost 64 years after he retired from the Army, Atlantic Beach resident H. Fletcher Martin has been recognized as a distinguished member of his regiment.

The recognition is part of an Army-organized project to link those who served in World War I and World War II with those in the units today. Martin is the fourth man in the nation to be so recognized, according to retired Lt. Col. Joseph H. Williams of Jacksonville.

Martin's link is with the 47th Infantry, which is now stationed in Fort Lewis, Washington. He served with the 4th Division in five major campaigns in Europe and received the Distinguished Service Cross for his actions near Bazoches, France.

According to the DSC citation, Martin was a lieutenant on Aug. 7, 1918, when he was assigned to lead his platoon across the Vesle River. Finding no footbridge to cross the river, Martin swam across, stretched ropes and improvised a pontoon structure, all while under heavy artillery and machine gun fire.

During the action, he noticed two men in danger of being carried away by the current and rescued them while under heavy gunfire from the enemy. Two days later when his company commander was wounded, Martin "fearlessly placed himself at the head of the most exposed unit and led it forward in a determined attack on Bazoches," the citation said.

According to Martin's son retired Col. Stephen G. Martin of Ponte Vedra, the actions mentioned in the citation inspired his regimental commander to write in Martin's service record, "The war has not produced a braver man."

Martin was later wounded in action, but returned to the 47th Infantry for the occupation of Germany. However, his right arm was paralyzed, and in 1924 he had to retire from the Army.

Martin continued his military connections by serving as the first chief of the Veterans Administration for the state of Florida at the office that was then located in Jacksonville.

Prior to volunteering for the Army, Martin was an attorney in Jacksonville. He had graduated first in his law class at Washington and Lee in Virginia, and after several years with the VA returned to private practice where he remained until retiring from the bar in 1980. It took 15 years for him to completely regain the use of his arm.

Martin and his wife, Viola, were married in 1922 and have four children. In addition to their son who served in the Army, their family includes Henry Fletcher Martin, Jr., who now serves as a circuit judge in Jacksonville, and Nancy Carroll of Ponte Vedra, who is well known at the Beaches for her work with Players By-The-Sea.

Their other daughter, Kathleen Boatwright, of Keystone Heights is a schoolteacher and coach, whose girls basketball team recently competed in the state semifinals. The senior Martins also have 15 grandchildren and 10 greatgrandchildren.

The men who are recognized as distinguished members of the regiment are encouraged to visit their old regiment, if they are physically able, to meet the current members, Williams said. However, Martin celebrated his 96th birthday on March 6 and his son doubts he will be able to make the long trip to Washington even though he would love to.

It really is a coincidence that Martin has one son in the Army and one in law. According to Col. Martin, his father encouraged him from the very beginning to join the Army, but it was Judge Martin's wife who encouraged him to take up law.

Even before he was recognized as a distinguished member of the regiment, Martin still kept up on today's Army through various publications and contacts.

Though he practiced law most of his life, H. Fletcher Martin's heart has always been in the Army.

CENTENARIANS HONORED

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the Nation's most senior citizens—the centenarians. While all of our seniors are a cherished resource, I would like to specifically recognize this most special group of Americans.

They are unique and deserving of recognition for no other reason than longevity, but most of the centenarians have much more to offer our society than fivescore years.

Most of these gentle folks have developed a well-defined sense of perspective which on occasion eludes their juniors. They know a tempest when they see it. They know a flutter in a teapot when they hear it. With centenarians, it is not easy to trivialize something important or to make important something trivial. Demagogs would perish in a society of centenarians, their exaggerations falling victim to wisdom and great experience.

In these times of complex issues and conflicting claims, discernment is a great virtue which aids greatly in a long and successful life. We would all do well to practice the discretion of the centenarians in hopes of emulating their tranquility and long life.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the American Centenarian Committee in proclaiming May 20 as the annual American Centenarian Day. On this day, the committee coordinates a national effort with Governors and mayors to honor our Nation's centenarian citizens for their lifetime contributions to family, community, and country.

On behalf of all the residents of the 22d Congressional District of California, I would like to express our gratitude and respect to this most treasured group—the centenarians.

ED CONRAD'S DISCOVERIES

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend to your attention an article which appeared in the Reading Eagle on February 21, 1988 entitled "Revelation? Mahanoy City Native Thinks So." This story recounts the anthropological discoveries of Ed Conrad, a constituent from Shenandoah, who, as the article notes, "has discovered what appears to be petrified bones in 24 sites along the spill banks of two coal viens * * * in the Mahanoy City and Shenandoah area." His findings are on display at the Greater Hazleton Historical Society Museum.

The article follows:

[From the Reading [PA] Eagle, Feb. 21, 1988]

REVELATION? MAHANOY CITY NATIVE THINKS SO

(By Bruce R. Posten)

In the beginning—and we're talking millions and millions of years ago—there was Mahanoy Man.

And where there was Mahanoy Man, there were apparently Mahanoy men, women, and children.

To state the obvious, these Mahanoy people are gone, but not forgotten.

For behold, another Mahanoy Man who lives today in Shenandoah and happens to work for a Hazleton newspaper, has discovered what appears to be petrified bones in 24 sites along the spill banks of two coal veins running 1½ miles wide and 17 miles long in the Mahanoy City and Shenandoah area.

His discoveries in rock have rocked some segments of the scientific world, especially those who have canonized—in the least theological sense of the word—Charles R. Darwin.

Sound incredible? Hold on.

Ed Conrad is the Mahanoy City native's name. He is 49 years old and, in his world, he is respected, objective mustachioed reporter for the Hazleton Standard-Speaker.

After seven years of probing coal banks and collecting all sorts of research, writing reams of letters, and meeting with archaeologists, paleontologists, anthropologists—not to mention politicians—Conrad, himself, has become an amateur archaeologist.

His fossil findings, which have amazed some scientists and shocked others, are on display on the second floor of an old Hazleton firehouse transformed into the Greater Hazleton Historical Society Museum. He has made many local folks proud.

To some, Ed Conrad is a sincere man with a mission. To others, he is a crackpot, a nut.

But if his mission of getting the world to accept petrified mammalian bone in coal is achieved, it could set the scientific world on its head, bringing into question a number of fundamental theories, including Darwin's concerning evolution.

Still sound silly?

On the surface, indubitably!

But . . . wait one minute. Conrad is not surface. He is dogged and persistent, going below the first strata, metaphorically and archaeologically speaking. He also is dead serious.

The cast of characters in this somewhat melodramatic and scientific drama are not to be taken lightly either.

The Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., is serious. Yerkes Regional Primate Research Center, Emory University, Atlanta, Ga., is serious. Teledyne Isotopes, one of America's largest scientific testing laboratories in Westwood, N.J., is serious.

And scientists and professors with names like Krogman, Dart, Pilbeam, Powell, Cuffey, Maisey, and Caroll also are serious.

"When this first started in 1981," said Conrad, sitting in a Hazleton restaurant talking animatedly over a cup of coffee, "I found something that looked like petrified bone, never thinking it was man. I was looking for leaf fossils at the time.

"Now I know what I've found is bone. I have confirmed it is bone . . . and I have outfoxed the foxes. Everything I have points to man being on earth well before the Darwin theory puts him there."

What Conrad has are letters from Yerkes Regional Primate Research Center and Teledyne confirming that specimens they've examined are bone—bone which Conrad found in veins of coal, which science has long claimed are a minimum of 280 million years old.

Naturally, science also has maintained that large animals—let alone man—did not exist during the Carboniferous Age (Coal Age).

So, Conrad wonders, how could man's petrified bones exist in strata that's 280 million years old when man is considered to be only 2 million years old—tops?

Further, Conrad said his petrified fossils, including approximately 80,000 pieces he keeps in his house (mandibles or jaws and anthropoid craniums or skulls etc.), predate the evolutionists' theory that our ancestors were monkeylike primates which existed 60 to 65 million years ago.

Microscopic tests conducted on Conrad's fossils showed that the cell structure in them is similar to human bone.

In a letter to Conrad, Dr. Jeremy F. Dahl at Yerkes referred to Conrad's specimens as "fossilized bone," but stopped short of identifying them as man, noting, "The only nonhuman primates became extinct 20 million years ago."

At Teledyne, Jonathan A. Powell, a geochemist, was more optimistic, writing to Conrad, "Certainly the body of evidence which you have collected combined with the expert opinions of a number of qualified individuals strongly suggests that the specimens are homined (form of man) remains." Powell urged further and more thorough testing.

Bolstering Conrad's theory are the opinions of two anatomists and bone experts, the late Wilton M. Krogman, author of "The Human Skeleton in Forensic Medicine," and Dr. Raymond A. Dart, an anatomist, who examined some of Conrad's fossils.

Dart wrote to Conrad saying, "In my opinion, the vast majority (of specimens he examined) bear the contours of bone and may well be petrified bone. . . . I am of the opinion that your findings warrant intense investigation."

Krogman was even more ecstatic.

"What an impressing—and challenging—array of what appears to be fossilized skeletal items, which, in appearance, point to the possibility of hominid interpretation," Krogman wrote.

However, most of the responses to Conrad's findings have not been that efffusive. Many of the prominent scientists have dismissed the amateur archaeologist out of hand.

"I do not think you have a fossil. I think it is incredible that anyone familiar with fossils would. Any further communication would waste both of our times," wrote David Pilbeam, anthropology professor at Harvard University.

"No scientist in his right mind would attempt to speculate on something as unusual as you suggest," said John G. Maisey, assistant curator of the Department of Vertebrate Paleontology, American Museum of Natural History.

"None of the material is fossilized bone; it never had been originally, and none of the other associated specimens are bone either; all the resemblances to fossil skulls or bone really are coincidental," wrote Roger Cuffey, a paleontologist at the main campus of Pennsylvania State University.

This type of response has not discouraged Conrad.

He believes he has stumbled upon "the greatest anthropological discovery of the century."

"It appears there are important, powerful scientific interests who would like Ed Conrad to go away," Conrad said. "But I will continue to fight for the truth."

At his own expense, Conrad has had a CAT scan performed on one of his human skull-like specimens which he said revealed similarities with human skulls. He also had scanning electronic microscope work done on one specimen that showed surface features of a human skeleton.

Eager to convince visitors to the Hazleton museum that his fossilized objects are, indeed, bone, Conrad has acquired human cadaver bones from a university anthropology department that he thinly slices for inspection under a microscope. He compares the cell structure of those specimens with the structure of his fossils.

In all this, he has shown a persistence beyond most average, mortal men—modern or prehistoric.

Why does he do it?

"I'm doing it because I feel science is corrupt in this one particular discipline about man's past," Conrad said. "I am the one operating like a true scientist."

"Sometimes I wonder, 'Why was this put on my shoulders? Why did I inherit this?' Maybe someone knows I don't give up that easily."

Grasping for historical parallels, Conrad compares himself to a modern-day Galileo.

"He (Galileo) looked through a telescope and said, 'Hey, the earth is not the center of the universe and no one believed him because it would have refuted the teachings of the church."

Speaking of which, Conrad has written a letter to Pope John Paul II, expecting that the Catholic Church might show some interest in a theory that possibly could cast a shadow over Darwin.

"All I was getting back from the Vatican were some notes from a lieutenant (Vatican official)," Conrad said. "I gave up on them."

Nevertheless, Conrad, in search of support, has written hundreds of letters to scientists, authors, bureaucrats, senators, President Reagan, Mikhail Gorbachev . . . Congressman Gus Yatron.

He has four filing cabinets filled with correspondence. His story has been told in a variety of regional newspapers, and this journalist, who worked for papers in Philadelphia, Montreal, and Toronto, has even made the Oct. 27, 1987, edition of the Congressional Record, courtesy of the Hon. Paul E. Kanjorski, area representative. The entry is titled "Man as Old as Coal."

In all this, Conrad contends he is not doing any of his research for self-glory and certainly not for riches.

"It's a labor of love," he said. "I've been doing it for so long. I'm not looking for help now. I'm just looking to get my story out to the public."

And there are apparently many local folks in the coal region who respect Conrad for just that.

That's one of the reason there is a certain price in having Ed Conrad's fossils in the town museum, an all-volunteer operated museum, by the way.

There's also local pride that stems from getting all the famous and not-so-famous responses to this issue neatly framed on the museum walls.

"Congratulations on your findings," wrote Erich von Daniken, author of "Chariots of the Gods." That comment is framed.

An ex-teacher of Conrad writes, "It's easy to see why the so-called experts are confused. Your main problem is that you have outrun the limits of their knowledge.

"What you have makes them uncomfortable. Much of what they have been teaching will have to be undone (if you are right)."

That comment is framed, too.

Right or wrong, better or worse, there is now distinction at the Greater Hazleton Historical Society Museum. Ed Conrad has helped to put it there.

And one little quotation in one little frame sums it up.

"This is the only museum in the world where petrified bone, found between coal veins, is on display."

MARIE BODACK WINNER IN REGIONAL AND STATE ORATORICAL CONTEST BY AMERICAN LEGION

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to recognize a patriotic and spirited young citizen, Miss Marie Bodack, for her prize-winning essay on the Constitution for the Annual American Legion Oratorical Contest. Marie, a student at Ursuline High School, of New Rochelle, NY, placed first place in both the regional contest, encompassing my 22d Congressional District, and State finals. In the National Finals, she advanced to the second round before bowing out of the contest. Marie Bodack's speech, "We the People," should serve as an inspiration to all Americans during this year of the Bicentennial of the Constitution.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I request that the full text of Miss Bodack's essay be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

WE THE PEOPLE

Many of us here can recite verbatim the preamble of the Constitution. Those of us who have not memorized the entire preamble must know that the first three words are "We the people." But how many of us who know this have ever thought about what those words really mean and how they are reflected in the Constitution, especially in the First Amendment and in today's society.

When all 55 delegates from 12 of the 13 colonies met in Philadelphia in 1787 to amend the Articles of Confederation, they decided that an entirely new document should be drafted. The end result of the convention was a document unique in the history of our country: The United States Constitution. Its uniqueness can be found in its trust in and reliance on the American people reflected in the 26 amendments passed throughout its 200 year history.

The fact that the original document did not contain provisions for the people upset many including Patrick Henry, one of the staunchest opponents of the Constitution, who cried, "What right had they (the framers of the Constitution) to say 'We the people'?" when the people's rights were not recognized. Also angered was the author of the Virginia declaration of rights, George Mason, who asked, "Where is the barrier drawn between the government and the rights of citizens?" Nevertheless, the Constitution was amended and the outcries of citizens' rights supporters continued to be heard. At the time when the Bill of Rights was drawn up, the colonists remembered the oppression they faced while under British rule and feared any form of oppression and so many fought to have their rights recognized in writing. Because of this, ten amendments to the Constitution were drawn up and ratified in 1791. They later became known as the Bill of Rights.

Today, the written words are broadly interpreted by the Supreme Court and their meaning strictly enforced. Among other things, the Bill of Rights protects the rights of the accused, the rights of the citizens to bear arms and the rights of the citizens to be secure in their houses.

Two hundred years after the Constitution was drafted the Amendments are still often cited. Without a doubt, one of the most often cited is the First Amendment, which reads:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people to peaceably assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

In our free society today there are often deeper questions pertaining to the legitimacy of the First Amendment—as Jonathan Bartlett in his book, The First Amendment in a Free Society, says, "the battle of the meaning of the First Amendment's guarantee of the right to assemble has been joined over a particularly divisive and as yet unresolved issue." No one would find fault with the public assembling in New York City for the Thanksgiving Day Parade or for a political speech but when the Nazis wanted to march in Skokie (a largely Jewish town in the Chicago suburbs) questions were raised, such as "Is there a limit to freedom of speech and what about the right of the Jews?" In the end, supported by the ACLU, the Nazis were allowed to hold peaceful rallies; however, those questions were never fully answered.

Clearly there are limits to the First Amendment. Even the Court has recognized that. In the Case of Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire (1942) Justice Murphy argued that "there are certain well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which have never been thought to raise any constitutional problem. These include the lewd and obscene, the profane, the libelous, and the insulting or "fighting" words—those which by their utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace." Justice Holmes beautifully illustrated this point 25 years earlier when he wrote: the most stringent protection of free speech would not protect a man in falsely shouting "fire" in a theater and causing a panic. The words to any legal document mean nothing if they are not carried out. The same holds true for the words of the Constitution, specifically the First Amendment—part of the Supreme law of the land. However, as we see the First Amendment is actively upheld in our society today and is kept alive by the people!

The First Amendment is

What allows us to openly protest the acts of the government;

What allows students of a St. Louis high school to sue the school because articles on sex were censored from the school's newspaper;

What allowed Steven Engel and three other parents to sue the New York State Board of Regents over the issue of a 22-word prayer said daily in public schools;

What allowed Donna Todd, a housewife, to criticize the IRS for the oath on the bottom of tax return forms;

What allows any one of us to worship our own God (or none at all).

Oliver Wendell Homes once said:

"The principal of the Constitution that more imperatively calls for attachment than any other . . . is the principal of free thought—not free thought for those who agree with us but freedom for the thought that we hate."

The first 200 years of the Constitution worked only because the people genuinely cared and stood up for their rights. It will only continue to succeed if people remain doing so, because nothing is as important as our freedom.

TRIBUTE TO EVANGELICAL MANOR

HON. ROBERT A. BORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Evangelical Manor, a nursing home for the independent elderly of my district, which celebrated its 100th anniversary this past Sunday.

On occasions like this I usually begin by saying "Sto Lat!", which is Polish for "may you live to be a hundred years old." But the Evangelical Manor has already achieved that proud milestone. The Evangelical Manor has a proud history, and deserves our thanks for its commitment to caring for our elderly for a century.

In 1888, it was founded as the German Home for the Aged on Fourth Street. One year later, it moved into this area, to a site at Hunting Park and Old York Road. The Evangelical Home extended its caring commitment to our elderly in the beginning of this century, when to be old often meant unemployment, poverty, and minimal quality of life.

Everyone associated with this home should proudly remember that half a century before Social Security made a pact with our citizens, and 80 years before Medicare brought good health care within reach of our elderly, the Evangelical Home not only knew about the problems of our elderly, but had started working to solve those problems.

The home moved here to Roosevelt Boulevard in 1931, and as you know, those were the years when Social Security was slowly and painstakingly born. As the Congress began to work on a national scale to create programs, the work of your predecessors here translated the work of Congress into the tender care that the residents here have always received.

The operative word here is "home." The Evangelical Home is your home, and has been home for thousands over the years, with a beautiful setting, and the opportunity to live independently, or receive medical support, as the situation dictates.

It seems to me that the goals here are very simple, dignity and independence in living; care and comfort in adversity.

Ladies and gentlemen, I began by wishing you "sto lat," Polish for may you live to be 100. But what my "sto lat" really means is may you live 100 more years.

One hundred more years. That will be 2088. I'll come back, and I expect to see all of you here, too.

Sto lat, and God bless you for your century of charity, kindness, and service to your community.

THE B-1B BOMBER

HON. ROBERT W. DAVIS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. DAVIS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the chance to comment on the B-1B bomber. As a member of the House Armed Services Committee whose district houses two Strategic Air Command bomber bases, I have spent a great deal of time and effort studying this aircraft.

To put it simply, the problems of the B-1B have been greatly overstated. There are problems, of course, as there are with any state-of-the-art weapon system. But those problems will be fixed and the plane, which leading Air Force officials are calling the finest bomber in the world, will get even better.

I have discussed the plane with Gen. John Chain, the commander of SAC, and I have talked to the pilots who fly the plane. They are united in their views that the B-1B is a great airplane that will make our Nation's deterrence even better.

The plane enjoys tremendous bipartisan support. It came in ahead of schedule and underbudget. It is one fine aircraft, and its record speaks for itself.

NATIONAL VOLUNTEERS WEEK

HON. CLAUDINE SCHNEIDER

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Miss SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, this week April 17 through April 23, 1988, is being recognized as National Volunteers Week. I would like to take this opportunity to commend all the volunteers of my State of Rhode Island, as well as those who put in valuable time, commitment and concern throughout all of our 50 States.

I don't know if this country fully acknowledges the work of volunteers. Each year nearly 100 million Americans help their neighbors through voluntary service. Voluntarism is both a spirit and tradition in the United States, helping us fulfill our social and cultural needs as well as stopping gaps in service to many needy populations.

Rhode Island's volunteer corps is comprised of organizations too numerous to mention; however, I would like to use the Greater Providence Retired Senior Volunteer Program as an example of Rhode Island's commitment to voluntarism. RSVP's 360 volunteers range in age from 60 to 93 years. They serve 61 area nonprofit agencies—from hospitals and health agencies to literacy programs and community cultural agencies. Last year they put in 70,000 hours of volunteer time! The participants in this truly vital program embody the spirit of our country's honorable tradition of voluntarism. Thanks to all of you for your contribution to society.

SUPPORTING WORLD POPULATION AWARENESS WEEK 1988

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, during the course of this day, the world has added nearly one-quarter of a million people to its population. More than 90 percent of those new members of the human family were today born into the nations of the Third World, where fragile developing economies have already been hard pressed to employ, house, educate, and feed burgeoning populations.

Every day and every year the problems relating to world population grow more severe. And yet too few of us realize the challenge that lies in front of us.

With that in mind, I am very pleased to announce that my own State of New Jersey is 1 of more than 40 States that are officially recognizing World Population Awareness Week this year. By proclamation, Gov. Thomas Kean has called on the residents of my State to join with millions of other Americans in taking time during the week of April 17–23 to consider the urgency of the challenge.

The need is made plain by a simple contrast between my State of New Jersey and a not unrepresentative nation of the Third World. Whereas the population of New Jersey, now roughly 7.5 million people, will take well more than 100 years to double at current birth rates, the population of Malawi in eastern Africa will double itself in a short 22 years—scarcely a single generation.

That kind of rapid population expansion creates enormous challenges for developing-world governments. I assure you, if the population of New Jersey doubled over the next 22 years, we would find ourselves quite hard pressed to keep up in terms of creating new jobs, new housing, building new schools, training new teachers, and so on. And if New Jersey, with its industrial base, skilled work force, and rich educational resources, would be pushed to the limit, I hardly need elaborate on the hardships that lie ahead for Malawi and the many other countries similarly situated throughout the Third World.

I am proud that the citizens of my State are helping to contribute to a solution by taking part in the third annual World Population Awareness Week. And I ask that the text of Governor Kean's proclamation be included in the RECORD.

The proclamation follows:

PROCLAMATION

Whereas, the world's population of more than five billion is projected to exceed six billion by the end of the century; and

Whereas, 90 percent of this increase is expected to occur in the poorest least developed countries of the world, which are already struggling to provide their people with adequate food, housing, sanitation facilities, employment, health care and other basic human services; and

Whereas, world overpopulaton is a major cause of problems of malnourishment and hunger, resource shortages, environmental deterioration and ecological degradation that lead to social unrest, rebellion and war; and

Whereas, there are an estimated 500 million people who need and want, but lack access to, voluntary family planning services; and

Whereas, substantial fertility declines have been recorded in many countries where there has been leadership commitment implemented with the assistance of organizations such as the United Nations Fund of Population Activities to enable couples to exercise the human right of voluntarily limiting their family size;

Now, therefore, I, Thomas H. Kean, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby proclaim April 17-23, 1988 as World Population Awareness Week in New Jersey, and call upon the citizens of this State to reflect upon the consequences of overpopulation and what they can do toward assisting in the achievement of population stabilization through humanitarian and voluntary action.

Given, under my hand and the Great Seal of the State of New Jersey, this third day of March in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eighty-eight and of the Independence of the United States, the two hundred and twelfth.

THOMAS H. KEAN,
Governor.

MERCK & CO., INC. MAKING A DIFFERENCE

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, in today's world, corporations are often criticized for caring too much about market values and profit margins. I rise today to commend a corporation for its charity.

As my colleagues may recall, last October Merck & Co. the New Jersey pharmaceutical company donated its drug Mectizan free of charge to combat the disease "river blindness" in tropical countries of the Third World. As a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee I applaud this corporate effort to solve this devastating health problem.

Onchocerciasis, or river blindness, afflicts 18 million people worldwide. Most of these people are Africans, South Americans and Middle Easterners who live along river banks. The disease is transmitted by a bite from the black fly. A parasite then develops, which ultimately results in weight loss, skin disfigurement and eventually complete blindness.

The drug Mectizan was originally developed to destroy parasites in livestock. Merck & Co. researchers recently discovered that it could also be used to treat and prevent river blindness. A patient can be treated with one oral dose per year.

Merck also realized that those who required this drug were too poor to afford it. Merck determined that the only realistic way to get the drug to those truly in need was to distribute it, with the help of the World Health Organization [WHO], free of charge.

This action by Merck exemplifies, I think, the best instincts and tradition of America, Mr. Speaker. Americans have been willing to share our resources and knowledge with the impoverished of the world. Merck is to be commended for following this tradition.

Then on Monday of last week, Mr. Speaker, Dr. P. Roy Vagelos, chairman and chief executive officer of Merck announced that it will donate $2.3 million for the construction of the Children's Inn at the National Institutes for Health [NIH].

The inn will be built on the campus of the Warren G. Magnuson Clinical Center in Bethesda. Treatment at the center is experimental and is often the last hope for a child inflicted with a disease for which there is no cure. The clinic treats approximately 1,300 children per year free of charge. Many patients come from all over the world to receive medicines and therapies that they can't get anywhere else.

These children are inflicted with various ailments including cancer, AIDS, heart disease, asthma and neurological and other disorders. Their length of stay varies with the child's condition and treatment results. About 60 percent of the children are suffering from cancer, which often requires chemotherapy treatments on an out-patient basis.

When a child is being treated as an out-patient, the child and family often must live in area motels or local residences, which the social work staff of the NIH help to locate. However, this does not provide the proper setting required for the children. The inn will give these suffering families a "sense of home."

The Children's Inn will be unique because it is located on the grounds of the facility where treatment is rendered, thus providing complete care and convenience to the families. Because of generous funding by Merck and other corporate sponsors, no family will have to pay to live there while their child is being treated.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Merck & Co., and in particular Mr. Vagelos, for these gifts. These two projects, one here at home and one in the impoverished Third World, serve as a model of the cooperation that is possible between business and government to help for the needy and the sick.

NICARAGUAN TRADE EMBARGO

HON. DON BONKER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, as chairmen of the Foreign Affairs Subcommittees on Western Hemisphere Affairs and International Economic Policy and Trade, GEORGE CROCKETT and I are today introducing, with Representatives CHARLES RANGEL and JOHN CONYERS, legislation to lift the U.S. trade embargo against Nicaragua. We believe that, today, just 2 weeks before the President must renew the embargo, it is important to go on record in opposition to the continuation of these sanctions. We drafted the legislation last year, following hearings by the subcommittees on this matter. As the Central American peace process has begun to make real progress, we believe the time is appropriate for consideration of this bill.

During testimony before the Foreign Affairs Committee in 1985, the administration testified that the President had imposed the limited embargo to signal disapproval of Nicaragua's internal and foreign policies. Unfortunately, he did so without consulting the Congress and without the concurrence of our allies. He waited until the Sandinistas had already begun to wean their economy from the United States. He also permitted the export of U.S. services, travel by U.S. persons, and the maintainence of U.S. diplomatic relations. We would argue that this piecemeal approach was inappropriate and ineffective.

The embargo was imposed with the full realization that the United States had dwindling economic leverage with Nicaragua; Secretary of State George Shultz admitted to our committee when the sanctions were imposed that it would not be "an overwhelming event." At our joint hearing last year, we found there is no consensus, between U.S. agencies or among private organizations, on what real economic impact the embargo has had. Most reports argue that the embargo has been an inconvenience to the Sandinistas and an embarrassment to the United States. The Nicaraguan Government is more reliant now on the Soviet block than it was before—a predictable result—and has a convenient excuse for its domestic economic woes. It can rally its people around the anti-American cause by blaming the U.S. Government for the food shortages, the inflation, and the financial drain caused by the war with the Contras. How is the common citizen to know otherwise? The private sector, made up largely of agricultural producers who were devoutly pro-American, has been most hurt by the embargo. I fail to see how these outcomes further U.S. foreign policy in the region.

At the joint subcommittee hearing last December on the embargo, we specifically looked at the problems U.S. citizen and church groups have had delivering donated humanitarian goods to the people of Nicaragua. It was clear from the testimony received at that hearing that the administration had overstepped the bounds of its authority in policing the export of items sent by the people of the United States to the people of Nicaragua. We are not at war with Nicaragua. Why then should the administration be threatened by the export of seeds, pencils, and farm tools? To clarify congressional intent that American citizens be allowed to send broadly defined humanitarian goods to the people of any country with which the United States is not at war, Chairman CROCKETT and I have also introduced House Concurrent Resolution 230.

The progress that has been made in the region, particularly in the negotiation between the Sandinistas and the Contras, has been due to the existence of the Central American peace plan and the initiatives made by the regional governments, not because of U.S. economic pressures. The Guatemala accord, while imperfect, presents the best approach to the conflict in Central America. It pledges the signatories to uphold the very principles and institutions the Reagan administration has urged the Sandinistas to adopt. But it will certainly fail if the United States continues to undermine the process. Congress' disapproval of additional military aid to the Contras was the first step to take. Lifting an ineffective trade embargo would be an even more timely symbol of our good faith.

I include a copy of the bill in the RECORD at this point:

Whereas on May 1, 1985, the President issued an Executive order declaring a national emergency with respect to Nicaragua and imposing an economic embargo against that country under the authority granted him by the International Emergency Economic Power Act;

Whereas in his message to Congress regarding the embargo, the President criticized the Nicaraguan Government for its aggressive activities in Central America, for its military buildup, for its close military and security ties to Cuba and the Soviet Union, and for its Communist totalitarian internal rule, and called upon that government to honor its commitments to noninterference, nonalignment, respect for democracy, and peace;

Whereas the President of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala, and Nicaragua signed a regional peace accord in Guatemala City on August 7, 1987;

Whereas the Central American peace plan pledges the signatories to the negotiation of cease-fire arrangements, democratization, free elections, termination of support for armed rebel groups in the region, and other measures to bring peace to the region; and

Whereas it is important that the United States lend its full support to the peace process undertaken by the five Central American government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That—

(1) United States interests in achieving a lasting peace in Central America would be served best by a negotiated settlement such as that embodied in the Guatemala Accord; and

(2) in order to affirm United States support for the Guatemala Accord and the Central American peace process, the President shall terminate the sanctions imposed on Nicaragua under the International Emergency Economic Powers Act and shall take other steps to restore normal economic and trade relations with Nicaragua.

U.S. TRADE STATISTICS

HON. TOM DeLAY

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, as the U.S. Congress prepares to consider the conference report on the omnibus trade legislation in the near future, it is timely to examine the most recent trade statistics between the United States and our largest trading partners. The U.S. trade statistics for the month of February 1988, just released by the Commerce Department, are not at all encouraging. The U.S. deficit with all of our trading partners rose to more than $13 billion in February, the worst monthly result since October of last year.

However, I believe that it is important for us to look behind this aggregate figure to some of the particular facts of trade between the United States and each of our major trading partners.

I would like to note particularly the case of trade figures just released by the Republic of China [Taiwan] for the first quarter of 1988. The first quarter of 1988 statistics show that United States exports to Taiwan increased by 136 percent in the first quarter of 1987. Taiwan's trade surplus with the United States declined to $1.9 billion from the prior year figure of $3.6 billion. Equally important, I would note that March 1988 appears to mark the third consecutive month where United States exports to the ROC were larger than those of Japan.

It appears likely to me that these figures will be confirmed by United States statistics, although the United States calculates value on a c.i.f. basis, Taiwan on an f.o.b. basis.

I would like to congratulate the Government of the ROC for its conscious "buy America policy." It is my belief that these recent trade statistics emphasize the willingness of the people on Taiwan to purchase American-made products. I would like to insert into the RECORD the attached letter from Dr. Fredrick Chien, representative for the Coordination Council for North American Affairs located here in Washington, DC.

COORDINATION COUNCIL FOR NORTH AMERICAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, April 9, 1988.

Hon. ——— ———,
Washington, DC.

DEAR ——— ———: Once again I would like to bring you up to date of some noticeable improvements in the trade gap between our two nations. It is very encouraging that trade figures just released by the Republic of China (ROC) government on Taiwan for the first quarter of 1988 continue to show a substantial reduction of our trade surplus with the United States. Let me list some of the major findings based on those statistics:

Compared with the same period in 1987, the first quarter of 1988 showed an increase of American exports to the ROC of 136% while the growth of Taiwan exports to the U.S. slowed down to only 7%. This represents a reduction in U.S. trade deficit with the ROC of 46%.

[In millions of U.S. dollars]

	ROC exports to the U.S.	U.S. exports to Taiwan, ROC	Balance
1st quarter 1987	5,091.7	1,477.3	3,614.4
1st quarter 1988	5,446.1 (+7%)	3,481.1 (+136%)	1,965.0 (−46%)

If compared with the immediately previous quarter, the fourth quarter of 1987, the picture is still impressive as U.S. exports to the ROC increased 47% while ROC exports to the U.S. reduced by 8%, narrowing the balance by 44%.

[In millions of U.S. dollars]

	ROC exports to the U.S.	U.S. exports to Taiwan, ROC	Balance
4th quarter 1987	5,912.7	2,373.9	3,538.8
1st quarter 1988	5,446.1 (−8%)	3,481.1 (+47%)	1,965.0 −44%)

A reasonable estimate can therefore be made to the effect that for 1988, the year end U.S. trade deficit with the ROC may just be around $8 billion, about half of the last year's size.

On a monthly basis, March 1988 stands out as the eighth consecutive month in a row that our trade surplus with the U.S. has shrunk drastically (to only $298 million compared with $1,564 million in August 1987, or $825 million in February 1988).

March 1988 also marks the third consecutive month whereupon the U.S. overtook Japan as the largest single source of imports to the ROC.

The records above fully indicate that our efforts in rectifying trade imbalance, most notably the appreciation of the New Taiwan dollar by 41%, have brought about enormously positive results. As our 1988 trade surplus with the U.S. may well be halved, this new trend should render obsolete and invalid some arguments in favor of a tough, protectionist U.S. trade legislation. It is our firm belief that a statisfactory solution to bilateral trade problems can only be worked out through friendship and cooperation instead of coercion and retaliation. This very principle, we hope, will be duly shared by both sides in the future.

With best regards,

Sincerely,

Fredrick F. Chien,
Representative.

LISTEN TO THE BRIDGES

HON. BUD SHUSTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, even pithy columnist George Will has outdone himself with a superlative piece on the importance of the Nation's infrastructure, appearing in the April 25 issue of Newsweek.

[From Newsweek, Apr. 25, 1988]

(By George F. Will)

New York, New York, it's a wonderful town [song-writers are not under oath], the Bronx is up and the Battery's down. And so, almost, is the Williamsburg Bridge. That 85-year-old suspension span across the East River connects Manhattan with America, which may not be in the national interest, but nearly a quarter of a million people use in daily. Used it. Since last Tuesday only pedestrians and bicyclists do. It is not quite collapsing—yet—but it is unsafe for vehicular traffic, and that is a considerable defect in a bridge.

The discovery last week of its corroded condition was serendipitous. The discovery occurred while the three surviving Democratic presidential candidates were careering around the Empire State promising to make America into a paradise and, in their spare time, pacify the Middle East. The mere crumbling of a bridge is too mundane a matter to arrest the attention of candidates who are bent on the betterment of all mankind. However, the sounds made by that tired old bridge (it was screeching and squealing ominously) should be listened to. It tells us more about our future than the candidates do. The nation has a huge bill coming due for the neglect of its infrastructure, meaning bridges, roads, airports, waterways, water and sewer systems—all the things that make everything else possible.

This neglect, which reflects a weak ethic of common provision, may be consequence of our individualism. Individually, Americans are exercising more and eating more sensibly to maintain their personal infrastructures while the nation's physical plant deteriorates. In the years dead ahead that physical plant is going to force itself upon our attention. It will be something to think about while we creep along in increasingly congested traffic, or wait for our delayed flights to take off at overburdened airports.

The National Journal reports that one out of four bridges is considered dangerous. More than 4,100 are closed. Every two days a bridge collapses. Sixty-five percent of the Interstate Highway System is in need of rehabilitation. The average age of the 1984 principal locks on the inland waterway system is 40 years. The Army Corps of Engineers says 3,000 dams in populated areas are hazardous. Air traffic has doubled in the 14 years since the last new commercial airport (Dallas-Ft. Worth) opened. Los Angeles needs to spend $111 million more every year just repairing streets or 60 percent of them will be unusable by the end of the century. The Environmental Protection Agency says $108 billion will be needed between now and then just for construction of new sewage treatment plants.

OK, some of these numbers may involve overreaching and attention seizing and an appetite for pork. Still, there are many needs and not enough money. The cost of public-works investment is substantial, but so is the cost of underinvestment. Millions of worker-years are lost as congestion and detours sap economic efficiency. The cost of Los Angeles County congestion is estimated to be nearly half a million hours a day and half a billion dollars' worth of working time (and 72 million gallons of gas) a year. Unfortunately, blocking the road to a solution is a mountain—Mount Deficit.

The deficit is the numerical expression of a cultural tendency, the national tendency to live for the moment and beyond our means, consuming more than we produce and investing too little, heedless about the future. A government devoting 14 percent of its budget to pay interest on its debts—to rent money—has not enough money for the physical prerequisites of efficient and commodious living. Four federal trust funds—highway, transit, aviation and waterways—had a combined cash balance of about $24 billion at the end of 1987, all of it from user fees that can be spent only on infrastructure. But our leaders, ever imaginative at cooking the books to make the deficit seem smaller than it is, are hoarding the money. This is done so that deficit estimates will be smaller and the Gramm-Rudman knife will be easier to avoid.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS

An earlier, more robust America had more energetic leaders regarding "internal improvements." On March 9, 1832, a candidate for the Illinois General Assembly distributed an open letter to the people of his county. The first plank in his platform was: "Time and experience have verified * * * the public utility of internal improvements," such as roads and navigable streams. Lincoln lost, but he soon won and authored a flurry of bills such as those pertaining to "a state road from the Wabash to the yellow banks of the Mississippi River" and "a canal upon the valley of the Sangamon River."

In 1808 Jefferson's Treasury secretary, Albert Gallatin, issued his "Report on Roads and Canals," a proposed network of projects, most of which were built over 60 years. It is unfortunate they were not built sooner. In 1816 John C. Galhoun, who eventually would sow seeds of secession, introduced a bill for internal improvements at federal expense. He warned that New York and other Northern states had public and private financial resources sufficient for such improvements, but that the South did not. Without federal help the South would be consigned to inferiority, and "disunion" might result. President Madison, taking a crabbed view of federal power, vetoed the bill as unconstitutional. Denied federal help, the South's dependence on slavery grew, as did its sense of separateness.

Disunion is not a danger today. Decay is. That is a pity because public works are the sort of things government is good at. The Tennessee Valley Authority and the Interstate Highway System were not just good in themselves, they were good for the morale of government, which periodically needs some inspiriting successes. Alas, in election years we have this sort of dispiriting experience:

You are driving warily down a street cratered with potholes deep enough to serve as silos for the MX missile. Your car radio is emitting the sounds of candidates promising to provide "meaningful jobs" and "a sense of community" in "model cities" in a disarmed world. And you are thinking (if thinking is possible as you jolt along, your radio chattering and radial tires disintegrating): Thanks a lot, but could we please start our trip to utopia on a well-paved street leading to a structurally sound bridge?

WORLD POPULATION AWARENESS WEEK

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, I would like today to call the attention of my colleagues to the statement of the Honorable Mario Cuomo, Governor of New York, proclaiming the week of April 17–23 to be "World Population Awareness Week."

The global problem of overpopulation is one which requires long-term attention and planning. Overpopulation has disastrous consequences, especially for those nations which already face any sort of resource shortage. The problems of inadequate health care, environmental decay, and poverty are worsened when a nation has no strategic population policy.

I commend Governor Cuomo for his recognition of this serious issue.

The following is a proclamation of the State of New York, executive chamber.

PROCLAMATION

The world's population of more than five billion will, at its present growth rate, double in the next 40 years.

More than 90 percent of this unprecedented growth takes place in nations of the third world least able to accommodate such rapid expansion.

Rapid population growth overwhelms the capacity of human societies to provide food, housing, education, employment and basic health services, and undermines economic development as well as social, cultural and political stability.

The massive proliferation of our human numbers places enormous strains on the global environment, contributing significantly to the depletion of natural resources, the conversion of cultivable fields and forests into wasteland and desert, the pollution of the earth's land and waters, and the destruction of its ozone layer.

The tragic results of the ever increasing imbalance between population and resources can be seen in the emergence of renewed famine in Africa and elsewhere.

The disastrous consequences that unchecked population growth portends for humankind and the natural environment can be averted by the extension of family planning services to the more than 500 million people in the developing world who need and want such services but lack the means or access to obtain them.

Now, therefore, I, Mario M. Cuomo, Governor of the State of New York, do hereby proclaim April 17-23, 1988, as "World Population Awareness Week" in New York State, and call upon all of its citizens to reflect upon the consequences of world overpopulation and the opportunities to contribute to a solution.

TO DEFEAT THE RULE ON H.R. 5 AND RETAIN SENATE DIAL-A-PORN LANGUAGE

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, the rule currently under consideration makes in order the language currently in the conference report and a separate vote on the Senate language banning dial-a-porn as a separate bill. Under the terms of this rule, even if the Senate language passed as a separate bill, it would not become part of the conference report on H.R. 5 and therefore would not be enacted into law at the same time as H.R. 5. or even ensure that the language would ever become law. If this rule is permitted to stand, it will ensure the passage of the "compromise language" as part of H.R. 5. The rule does not state a time certain when the Helms-Bliley language will be considered by either the House or Senate. Even if the House took up this bill immediately following a vote on H.R. 5, there is no assurance that the Senate will either take up this bill, or pass it unamended. For that reason, the rule must be defeated and amended to allow a vote on whether the Senate language may be substituted for the "compromise" language currently in H.R. 5.

For over 4 years, many of us in Congress have attempted to protect children from gaining access to obscenity and indecency over the telephone. This type of communication, commonly known as dial-a-porn, has been a heartache to parents who feel helpless responding to the threat it poses to their children. In response to this problem, my colleague, TOM BLILEY, introduced, and I cosponsored, H.R. 1786, the Telephone Decency Act, to prohibit the transmission of obscene or indecent communications by means of telephone for commercial purposes. The Senate dial-a-porn amendment to H.R. 5, The School Improvement Act of 1987, is identical to this bill.

Legislative action to prohibit dial-a-porn began in 1983 and has continued to this day. Currently the House bill has the support of 163 cosponsors. Among these are 27 out of 42 Members of the Energy and Commerce Committee which has jurisdiction over this legislation.

The original section 223, as passed in 1968, prohibited obscene, lewed, lascivious, filthy, or indecent communications by means of telephone. The law did not state that the maker of the comment must also be the maker of the call, so the dial-a-porn service, in which a caller accesses by telephone a recorded message of a sexually explicit nature, was clearly covered by the language of the statute. However, because "dial-it" services did not exist when the law was enacted, the FCC claimed uncertainty concerning its ability to act on complaints against these services.

A current provision in section 223(d) of the Communications Act of 1934 affirmatively authorizes the operation of dial-a-porn for consenting adults. The problem is that the telephone number for this pornography service is widely circulated among young people and widely utilized.

The Senate amendment basically removes a loophole in current law which permits dial-a-porn to operate. The loophole has two parts. The first part is that the portion of section 223(b)(2) makes dial-a-porn criminal only if it goes to a person under 18 years of age or to a person who has not consented to receive the message. Therefore the Senate amendment makes the prohibition against dial-a-porn apply to everyone, not just minors and consenting adults.

The second part of the loophole which is eliminated by this amendment is a portion of section 223(b)(2) which provides: "It is a defense to a prosecution under this section that defendant restricted access to the prohibited communications to persons 18 years of age or older in accordance with procedures which the Commission shall describe by regulation."

For this reason the Energy and Commerce Committee adopted an amendment to section 223 of the Communications Act to give the FCC unquestionable authority to impose sanctions on telephone pornographers. In November 1983, a largely modified version of this language was incorporated into the FCC reauthorization legislation, H.R. 2755. This language, a mistaken attempt at compromise, legalized dial-a-porn for adults while prohibiting communications to children.

Dial-a-porn first became available in March, 1983. It should have been prosecuted under existing Federal law (47 U.S.C. 223) which provided that "Whoever in . . . interstate or foreign communication by means of a telephone makes any comment, request, suggestion or proposal which is obscene, lewd, lascivious filthy or indecent . . . shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned for not more than 6 months or both." The FCC and DOJ declined to enforce section 223 because they interpreted the law to apply only to persons who utter obscene words during calls that they place.

Congress became frustrated with the lack of legal action taken against dial-a-porn and in late 1983 amended section 223 making it a crime to make "any obscene or indecent communication for commercial purposes to any person under 18 years of age or to any other person without that person's consent."

The FCC was charged with the duty of compiling regulations which would deny access to dial-a-porn to persons under 18. Attempts by the FCC to issue regulations have been totally unsuccessful and have been struck down as unconstitutional. Therefore, there is presently nothing in law or regulation which restricts access to minors.

The tragedy of dial-a-porn is particularly evident in the case of Brian T. and Rebecca C. in California. Opponents of this amendment claim that the law prohibits these communications except to "consenting adults." The problem with that logic is that it has proven impossible to stop children from calling these widely advertised numbers and the consequences have been devastating.

Note the following examples:

The first incident occurred on July 26, 1987, and is related below in a letter addressed to a Member of Congress:

> 'Dial-A-Porn" has deeply affected my family and friends. . . . My 13-year-old son, Kevin, called the 900 number. Kevin's friend Don, 15, was over and they were listening to the prerecorded messages. Later when I arrived home from work I immediately made them hang up. Unknown to me, Kevin's 14-year-old brother was listening on another line with his two friends. They continued to listen passing it back and forth. Their sister Jacqueline, 10, was also listening on her extension.
> Within 48 hours Don and his 11-year-old brother molested my daughter Jacqueline. The Clio Vienna Township Police were notified and in their investigation revealed the fact that Jacqueline had encouraged them by asking them to touch her and "Do it with her"—phrases she heard on the "Dial-a-porn." Later the same day I learned that Kevin had sexual intercourse with a girl. His response when asked why was "it sounded like fun." I asked him, "What sounded like fun?" and he said "You know the phone call, the $74 phone call."
> This phone call has damaged our lives. It has caused strain and distrust in our family. We have had conflict with our neighbors when we had to inform them of their children's involvement. Most of all it has done permanent damage to our daughter. Somehow the proper steps must be taken to eliminate this diseased pornography that is so readily available to children. . . . Please help our children to prevent such occurrence again.

A similar incident occurred in Hayward, CA, in 1987 when Brian T. filed a lawsuit against dial-a-porn alleging that defendants exposed 12-year-old Brian T. to 2½ hours of their sex message products by means of a telephone for commercial purposes. That intensive exposure incited and caused plaintiff Brian T to act on those sex message products and on/or about June 22, 1987 in the city of Hayward, he engaged in unlawful sexual contact with 4-year-old plaintiff Rebecca C. including but not limited to compelling her to orally copulate him.

These incidents can only be called a tragedy.

In the more than four years during which dial-a-porn has purportedly been illegal, this service has thrived and spread from New York to many other major cities around the U.S. At least five of the seven major telephone companies carry this dial-it service. According to Telemarketing, Inc., dial-a-porn telephone sex has achieved astonishing financial growth during the second Reagan administration and now grosses $2.4 billion a year. In addition, half of all phone calls using California's 976 extra-billing prefix are for pornographic taped messages or live pornographic discussion. According to the CA Public Utilities Commission, of the $64.2 million collected by Pacific Bell between July 1986 and May 1987 for 976 calls, $40.1 million went to "adult" services. The PUC is considering methods for complying with state legislation mandating that customers be allowed to block the service from their phones for a minimal fee. Pacific Bell has refunded more than $2.3 million this year to customers who say 976 calls from their phones were made by a minor, an unauthorized person, or a caller without knowledge of the extra billing.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE AMENDMENT

The first objection that will be leveled at this amendment is that it violates the customer's First Amendment right to receive dial-a-porn messages. This objection is without merit.

The Supreme Court has firmly established that obscenity is not protected by the First Amendment (Miller versus California (1973)). While the mere possession of obscene material in the home cannot be made a crime (Stanley versus Georgia, 1967), there is no correlative right to purchase obscenity in the marketplace or have it distributed to your house through commercial channels (U.S. v. 12 200-ft Reels, 413 U.S. 123 (1973)). The Court has clearly held that there is no right to "receive" obscenity in "the privacy of the home" and no right to use "common carriers in interstate commerce" for delivery of obscene material to the home (U.S. versus Orito, (1973)). In addition, in FCC versus Pacifica Foundation (1978), the Court specifically held that radio and T.V. do not have a right to broadcast indecent material into the home and rejected the contention that an individual has a right of access in the home to indecent broadcasts. In so holding, the Court reasoned that such broadcasts are "uniquely acessible to children" and that the government interest in protecting the "well-being of its youth" justified the regulation of otherwise protected speech.

In addition, it cannot be argued that Butler versus Michigan, (1957) protects dial-a-porn. The principle enunciated in that case states that a "harmful to minors" standards cannot be applied to adults and children alike because then it would reduce the adult population to hearing only what is fit for children. This standard is inapplicable to dail-a-porn because it only applies to cases where the distributor of indecent material can readily distinguish between adults and children. This clearly cannot be done when a child calls a tape-recorded message.

Even assuming that the distribution of dial-a-porn to children could be prevented, the Supreme Court has rejected the contention that the distribution or transmission of obscene materials between consenting adults is constitutionally sanctioned. In Paris versus Adult Threater v. Slaton (1973) the Court held that:

> We categorically disapprove the theory that obscene, pornographic films acquire constitutional immunity from state regulation simply because they are exhibited for consenting adults only . . . We hold that there are legitimate state interests at stake in stemming the tide of commercialized obscenity, even assuming it is feasible to enforce effective safeguards against exposure to juveniles and to passersby. Rights and interests other than those of the advocates are involved.

The Senate amendment to H.R. 5 passed the Senate 98-0 and will have the effect of stopping this abuse if retained. The changes it makes are simple and take into consideration Supreme Court decisions regarding obscene and indecent speech. The amendment does nothing more than restore the original intent of the 1983 amendment which purportedly clarified the law. It was not until 1983 that obscene and indecent communications over the phone became legal. The purpose of the amendment is to restore, not change.

PASTOR DONALD CODDINGTON, GRACE BAPTIST CHURCH, NEWHALL, CA

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, after serving the ministry of the Baptist Church for 36 years, Pastor Don Coddington has retired.

For the past 11 years, Don Coddington has been the associate minister of the Grace Baptist Church in Newhall, CA. Prior to his service in my district, he blessed the congregations in Skokie, IL, Riverdale, IL, Superior, WI, and Mora MN. In each of those communities, he was also a member of the board of trustees of the Baptist General Conference. During his long ministry he has been involved in three Billy Graham crusades. He has also been a devoted supporter of the "I Found It" telephone crusade sponsored by the Campus Crusade for Christ.

Pastor Coddington, who was born in Middletown, NJ, was a graduate of Moody Bible Institute. He took additional studies at Wheaton College, the Northern Baptist Seminary, Bethel Seminary, the California Graduate School of Theology and Fuller Seminary.

Since 1977, Don Coddington has been a beloved member of the ministerial staff at Grace Baptist Church in Newhall. He has labored tirelessly on behalf of his parishioners and his neighbors. He has devoted himself to their emotional and spiritual well-being. As his affection for his church was great, so was their affection for him. As a gift of gratitude upon his retirement, the congregation presented Pastor Coddington and his wife, Helen, with a recreational vehicle in which they now travel the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to recognize the retirement of an exemplary individual, Pastor Don Coddington of the Grace Baptist Church.

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, on April 24, 1988, many people from Reading, PA, and from all over the east coast will be descending upon the campus of Alvernia College in Reading for the 1988 Celtic Festival. The festival will give us all an opportunity to learn about the art, culture, and heritage of the countries of the Celtic nation and reflect upon their many contributions to our own heritage.

A number of special events and demonstrations are planned for this year's festival in an effort to provide the widest possible introduction to the richness of the Celtic heritage. The day will begin with folk dancing demonstrations and several concerts of Irish, Scottish, and Welsh music. In addition, lectures on Irish Gaelic and on traditional Celtic crafts will be presented. These presentations will be topped off with a concert by Silly Wizard, one of the finest and most dynamic Scottish bands. With its mix of traditional and original music from Scotland, Silly Wizard has been thrilling audiences throughout Europe and the United States for years. By combining traditional songs with original pieces, Silly Wizard has been able to keep the tradition of Scottish music alive while also expanding the audience to those of us not familiar with this tradition. The band is now on its last U.S. tour so we are especially lucky that they will be coming to weave their special magic at Alvernia College.

Like Silly Wizard, the festival organizers, led by Nina Mollica, seek to keep the Celtic tradition alive while also exposing this heritage to a wider audience. Under Ms. Mollica's outstanding leadership, Alvernia College has been able to attract a number of world and nationally renowned artists to the festival. Through the 1988 Celtic Festival, Alvernia has made an invaluable contribution to education and culture in the Reading area.

This year's festival is the first of its kind for Reading, but I am certain that it will be a big success. We all hope that this can become an annual event for our city. Mr. Speaker, I know that my colleagues will join me in honoring everyone involved with the 1988 Celtic Festival and in wishing them continued success and good fortune in the years to come.

EQUITY FOR THE "NOTCH" SURVIVORS

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, recently I had the opportunity to testify before a Ways and Means Subcommittee on the difficult problem of the Social Security "notch" inequity. As many of my colleagues are aware, this is a problem of grave concern to many of our constituents and to senior citizens throughout our Nation. I feel that it is incumbent upon Congress to correct the injustice which we inadvertently imposed upon senior citizens born between 1917 and 1921, and I request the full text of my testimony be inserted at this point in the RECORD so that my colleagues will have the opportunity to share my views on this issue.

STATEMENT OF REPRESENTATIVE BENJAMIN A. GILMAN, FROM THE 22D DISTRICT OF NEW YORK BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON SOCIAL SECURITY OF THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS, REGARDING THE SOCIAL SECURITY "NOTCH" PROBLEM ON APRIL 14, 1988

Mr. Chairman, Members of the Committee, I would like to take this opportunity to commend you for holding today's hearings on the social security "notch" inequity. As an original co-sponsor of H.R. 1917, the Roybal bill, and as the first Republican cosponsor of H.R. 3788, the Sanford-Ford measure, I welcome the opportunity to testify in support of these legislative initiatives to correct the injustice suffered by Senior Citizens born between the years 1917 and 1921.

Mr. Chairman, the views I present today are shared by many of our constituents, many of our colleagues, and by Senior Citizens throughout our Nation. I thank the Committee, therefore, for its willingness to consider this substantial body of opinion, and I hope that Committee members will be persuaded to see the merit in what our seniors have to say about the notch-year transition. Our Seniors, and many other responsible observers, are telling us that something is wrong with the social security benefit formula enacted in 1977, and we owe it to them to hear their concerns and take some from of corrective action.

The notch-year inequity stems from a Congressional effort to correct an error in the 1972 Social Security Act Amendments that threatened to bankrupt the entire social security system. In an unintentional miscalculation, Congress provides social security recipients with an increase that double-indexed for inflation, accounting for the rise in the cost-of-living not once, but twice.

Let the record show, however, that Congress had intended to provide social security recipients with some form of an increase in 1972. In 1977, when Congress revisited the issue, the intention of enhancing Senior Citizen benefits remained unchanged. In light of this fact, the treatment shown to notch-year recipients seems highly incongruous. Congressional intent is evident in the measures which Congress pursued to minimize the impact of the initial benefit reductions. Congress certainly did not intend to single out notch-year recipients for unfair or discriminatory treatment. Unfortunately, however, in another example of good intentions gone awry, the effect of the transition to the new formula fell disproportionately upon those Senior Citizens born during the notch-years 1917 to 1921.

The transition formula failed to work because it did not take account of earnings made after the age of 61, and it could not predict the double digit inflation suffered throughout the late 1970's and early 1980's. Thus, workers who turned age 63 in the years 1979 to 1983, immediately after the transition rule took effect, were subject to drastic benefit reductions of in some cases as much as 10 to 20 percent. This is certainly not the gradual benefit reduction of 6 to 10 percent which Congress had intended.

Congress did not intend for this transitional period to treat notch-year recipients overly harshly. We certainly did not intend to require benefit disparities of as much as $1,200 for workers born two days apart, simply because one worker was born in the wrong calendar year. The legislation which has been introduced in the 100th Congress, and which enjoys the cosponsorship of more than 150 of our colleagues, would restore a fair and equitable transitional formula. H.R. 1917 and H.R. 3788 restore the original intent which Congress has displayed in both 1972 and 1977, without creating egregious benefit disparities and without threatening the future viability of the social security system.

Accordingly, I urge the Subcommittee to pursue these legislative initiatives which would allow for a more gradual transition to the newly corrected benefit formula. These proposals avoid the mistakes of the past. They would not throw us back to the double-indexed formula of 1972. They would not arbitrarily discriminate against a specific segment of our elderly population merely by virtue of their birth. Most importantly, they would restore confidence in the Federal government's willingness and ability to provide for the retirement years of our Nation's Senior Citizens in a manner which is fair and equitable. Mr. Chairman, I would submit that this is the true intent of social security.

TRIBUTE TO COMMUNITY CARE CENTER OF THE NORTHEAST

HON. ROBERT A. BORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the Community Care Center of Northeast Philadelphia. Inspiration is what happens when action is wedded with a good purpose. Inspiration is the root of all truly good deeds. Inspiration surrounds you when you walk in the door of Community Care Center of the Northeast at 8112 Frankford Avenue. Their staff of 26 full- and part-time health care professionals, and their dozens of volunteers are "creating a harmony of body and soul" through their hard work, according to Jean Langenbach, the director and founder.

I visited with them a few weeks ago, and accompanied Jean, and Terry Nobel, their assistant director, on two home visits. I was invited to come meet them and find out about their operation after they had contacted my office about a home health care bill which I had sponsored. Once we knew of their program, I was eager to visit them and learn more.

They supply home health care and assistance to the elderly and others who need it in the Holmesburg, Mayfair, Frankford, Rhawnhurst and Oxford Circle areas. But the word "assistance" to them means more than performing medical duties. Their aids and volunteers wash their patients, shop and sometimes cook for their patients. According to their records, their volunteers gave over 8,800 hours last year, and they made over 500 skilled nursing visits at no charge, and another 500 at their usual fee. Over 8,500 home health aid hours were spent aiding people on a sliding scale, according to the patients' ability to pay.

But even telling you that they spent over 17,000 hours helping the people of our community does not quite capture the soul of their effort. Community Care Center was born when Jean Langenbach, an R.N., decided that "when I was ill, only my symptoms were treated." She felt that the recovery of a person's spirit was as important as the recovery of their body, and that while medicine could treat the infirm elderly's physical ailments, only human contact could mend their spirits. Three years ago, the Holmesburg Methodist Community Center helped her bring that inspired vision into a reality of generous and charitable actions.

Jean Langenbach told me that "the greatest disease that our folks face is loneliness. Our people aren't well enough in most cases to go out on their own, and their connections to the rest of the world grow fewer and fewer. We come into their homes, and we become their connection. Our people care, and we have even gotten some of our clients to call each other, and set up a network of friends, who will look after each other."

I saw a striking example of this when I visited the Wesley family with Jean and Terry Nobel, Community Care Center's assistant director. We arrived when Lorraine Sisilia, CCC's worker was with them, and I asked Mrs. Wesley what she would do without Lorraine. She told me that Lorraine had just taken a few days' vacation, "and I missed her the whole time." I heard dozens of stories about this kind of care and compassion from the agencies like Catholic Social Services, which work with them every day.

Kindness, compassion, and inspiration. What a wonderful combination, especially for those who receive them from Community Care Center.

HONORING CHIEF HENRY SMITH ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RETIREMENT

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Chief Henry J. Smith of the Bogota Police Department on the occasion of his retirement. It is with great pleasure and respect that I honor Chief Smith who is retiring with over 37 years of devoted service from the Bogota Police Department in Bogota, NJ.

Chief Smith served 4 years of active duty in the Navy where he advanced to the highest rank of motor machinist first class. After his naval service, he entered the Bogota Police Department in 1950. In addition to serving as the New Jersey State Delegate for the Police Benevolent Association [PBA], Chief Smith also served as president of the local PBA for two terms. He was also named New Jersey policeman of the month.

In addition to this duties as a devoted public servant, Chief Smith has been an active member in his community. A church member for over 40 years at St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, he was St. Joseph's Church athletic director for 12 years.

Chief Smith is the devoted husband of Dorothy Lea Otto Smith of Bogota and the father of four children. His two sons are currently on active duty in the armed services, John as a major in the U.S. Army and Michael as a lieutenant commander in the U.S. Coast Guard. Joanne and Barbara, his two daughters, are registered nurses.

I join Chief Smith's family and friends in honoring him on the occasion of his retirement.

TRIBUTE TO THE YOUTH DEVELOPMENT CENTER OF BENSALEM, PA

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge and pay tribute to the youth development center in Bensalem, PA, in my congressional district and to the RCA Educational Program at the center, a component of General Electric Co. I visited the RCA-Youth Development Center a short while ago, and was very impressed with the program for disadvantaged youth which is being undertaken there. The youth development center is a very special treatment program that serves the Philadelphia area and has provided quality habilitative and rehabilitative treatment services for delinquent youth for the last 27 years. The center has a history of working with the most difficult adjudicated delinquents from throughout the entire Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Currently, the youth development center in Bensalem has two distinct program areas serving the needs of male junvenile offenders. There areas are: First, open residential and second, secure care. These two programs serve as the base on which various specialized treatment components are built. Common to both is the educational component, currently provided by RCA/GE, which has provided educational services for the last 18 years.

The youth development center has responded to the needs of the courts and the public in its attempt to develop specialized treatment services for the special needs of its clients, who include criminal offenders, drug and alcohol abusers, school delinquents and mental health outpatients.

Psychological and psychiatric services, medical and dental services, volunteer resources, theraputic recreational services, religious services and the master case planning system services are all provided at the Bensalem center.

The mission and purpose of the facility is to bring about positive changes in the youth committed to its care. When I visited the center, I saw programs designed to break the cycle of dependency and prepare these youth to return to the community and function within the confines of the law. In order to accomplish this task, the facility is dedicated and committed to providing quality programs and a safe, secure environment in which to live, learn and work.

The core administrative and management personnel are as follows: Executive director of the youth development center, Leon B. Davis; assistant director of open residential program, James D. Jackson; assistant director of secure care treatment, Dorie L. White; program supervisors, Warren T. Knight and Tom Head; business manager, Norman S. Barbieri.

Mr. Speaker, the RCA/GE school has provided over 18 years of quality education and has received six national citations, including the Phi Delta Kappa Award and four State citations for scholarship and discipline. The staff has over 190 years of combined professional experience and is certified in 40 different areas. Eighty percent of the staff hold master's degrees, Mr. Speaker.

This is the only correctional school where security and open residential students attend school together. The programs offered include vocational education, guidance and counseling, bilingual education, computer education, distributive cooperative education, and varsity intrumural sports. The school also has a work program which supplies jobs for over 200 needy students.

I noticed during my visit to the school that there is high staff morale, and commitment to professionalism, and a deep concern for the welfare of the students. The educational program provides an environment conducive to learning for some of the Commonwealth's most difficult juveniles.

RCA/GE administrators involved with the program include: Mike F. Camardo, division vice president and general manager; Al A. Androlewicz, division vice president; Valaida W. Randolph, director of international program; L.C. Cook manager, international projects; Tom Haney, manager, contract administration; Vince Cugini, manager, administration, education and human services; senior corporate attorneys, Ken Statmore and J.J. Cook; and secretaries of education and human services, Marie Whitby, Helen Campbell, Diane Jenkins, Janet Bell, and Joan Walinski.

The staff at the school include: Chief school administrator, Wylie J. Hinson, Jr.; vice principal, Bryant L. Horsley, Sr.; dean of students, William F. Brown; supervisors, Jeanene I. Anker, Nina Apfelbaum, Jeffrey L. Brown, Thomas C. Burst, Ronald V. Edwards, and William R. Simmons; guidance counselors, Alberta V. Myers, Michelle Roberts, and Carol M. Thompson; instructors, John Boyd, Bobby Clark, Samuel Cook, Mary Dunbar, John Funk, Cindy Golden, Warren Hartz III, Tanya M. Morgan, Phillip Pace, Carl Penxa, Cathy A. Robbins, Valerie J. Slott, John Stanley, Rhoda Stein, William Stokes, and Leroy White; secretary, Tracey McDonald; and teacher aids, Craig Hodges, Norman Hodo, James Nash, and Norman Whitehead.

The RCA school is jointly funded by the Pennsylvania Department of Education and the Department of Welfare.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent the RCA-Youth Development Center. The staff, because of its dedication and commitment, is having a positive impact in Pennsylvania, and is helping hundreds of young people become responsible and productive citizens.

WORLD POPULATION AWARENESS WEEK, APRIL 17 to 23, 1988

HON. DON BONKER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, there are dire predictions for the growth of the world's population, and the difficulty we will face in responding to the needs of this burgeoning population.

We are all familiar with the problems: poverty, famine, disease, pollution, the degradation of our natural resources. We also know that the only way to cope effectively with our future population is to begin preparing now to address the problems we foresee.

I urge my colleagues to take time this week to focus on the global population issue—to think about the ways in which we may begin to avert these predictions of our future.

It is in the spirit of seeking solutions to the population crisis that I commend to my colleagues this proclamation, signed by Booth Gardner, the Governor of the State of Washington.

PROCLAMATION

Whereas, the world's population of more than five billion will, at its present growth rate, double in the next 40 years; and

Whereas, more than 90 percent of this unprecedented growth takes place in nations of the Third World, which is least able to accommodate such rapid expansion; and

Whereas, rapid population growth overwhelms the capacity of human societies to provide food, housing, education, employment and basic health services, and undermines economic development as well as social, cultural and political stability; and

Whereas, the results of the ever increasing imbalance between population and resources can be seen in the emergence of renewed famine in Africa and elsewhere; and

Whereas, family planning services can help the more than 500 million people in the developing world who need and want such services but lack the means or access to obtain them;

Now, therefore, I. Booth Gardner, Governor of the State of Washington, do hereby proclaim April 17-23, 1988, as "World Population Awareness Week" in the State of Washington, and I urge all citizens to join me in this observance.

AMBASSADOR MAXWELL M. RABB

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 18, 1988

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this special order for our outstanding Ambassador to Italy, the Honorable Maxwell M. Rabb. At the outset I want to commend our colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey, PETER RODINO, for his thoughtfulness in asking for this special order.

Max Rabb is an outstanding public servant who has served his country well in a number of capacities. Whether as Senate staffer, war veteran, Presidential assistant, or Ambassador, he has always reflected credit on the U.S. Government and the objectives our foreign policy has sought.

As chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, I have had the opportunity to meet with Ambassador Rabb on a number of occasions. He has been the longest serving U.S. Ambassador to Italy in the history of our diplomatic relations with that country. Max Rabb has helped to sustain and enrich traditionally-close relations between the United States and Italy. He has been at least partially responsible for a number of advancements in bilateral relations, including Italian deployment of modernized intermediate nuclear missiles, which helped pave the way for the elimination of such missiles by the Intermediate Nuclear Force Treaty. With Mr. Rabb's persuasion, the Italian Government has agreed to participate in three multinational peacekeeping forces in the Middle East and accept the stationing of F-16 aircraft recently removed by the terms of the Spanish base agreement.

Ambassador Rabb's extensive achievements have also been acknowledged by the Italian Government. First as Presidential assistant to President Eisenhower, and now as Ambassador, he has received honorary titles seldom given to foreigners for distinguished contributions to the Italian Republic. In the often rough-and-tumble style of Italian politics, issues of foreign policy can sometimes strain bilateral relations. But despite disagreements that can develop, Ambassador Rabb's special practice of diplomacy has helped to smooth over rough spots and enable policymakers to find constructive solutions to often difficult problems.

At 77 years young, the United States is fortunate to have such an able Ambassador as Max Rabb in Rome. I wish him continued success and best health to the Ambassador and his lovely wife, Ruth.

AMERICA'S LIBERTY—OUR HERITAGE

HON. MICHAEL G. OXLEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, for the past 41 years, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and its ladies auxiliary have conducted the Voice of Democracy broadcast scriptwriting contest. This year more than 30,000 secondary school students participated in the contest competing for nine national scholarships totaling $42,500.

Ms. Alison M. Phillips, of the Fourth Ohio District, authored Ohio's winning essay. With this year's theme, "America's Liberty—Our Heritage," Alison eloquently reminds us how precious our freedom and liberty is. In her script, Alison points out that while our Nation has witnessed times of strife, it is now stronger than ever and it is up to each one of us to protect our liberties and freedom.

A student at Wynford High School in Bucyrus, OH, Alison has excelled in academics and displayed tremendous leadership potential. I compel to my colleagues attention the work of this fine young woman.

AMERICA'S LIBERTY—OUR HERITAGE

(By Alison M. Phillips)

I have inherited two quilts. One I treasure as a prized possession. It is a piece of art displayed proudly on my wall. The other lies in the linen closet waiting to be packed for a camp-out, taken to a football game, or curled in on the couch. It is no thing of beauty.

The fine quilt was skillfuly patterned and planned. Each tiny stitch was hand sewn precisely and purposefully. The intricate designs bring oohs and ahs of wonder. It has been carefully preserved and treated with reverence. The other was merely pieced together with little more thought than to achieve a rectangle. Its blocks are irregular, its stitches uneven. This quilt is worn and mended, ravelled and dingy. Its creator used what she had—a scrap of an old blanket, a tattered shirt, an out-dated tie.

However much I marvel at the detailed beauty of my lovelier quilt, I must admit, no one has ever snuggled beneath its folds. For all its exquisite beauty, it is no very warm or soft. Instinctively I reach for the ragged one for comfort and security.

Like that much-used and well-loved quilt is liberty. Though sometimes I wish its appearance were more attractive, I realize that its character has been shaped by its many tears and that its strength is reinforced through its repair.

The men and women who stitched our liberty utilized what they had. Great men, led by Jefferson, Adams and Franklin, drew the plans for this unprecedented quilt. Though patterned after the ideas of philosophers like Locke and Montequieu, their plans were sketchy. These men could not be certain how their quilt would look in the end. Indeed, they were not even sure how it could be sewn together. But they clearly stated what the result should be—a blanket of freedom, providing protection from the chill of tyranny and injustice.

It was basted together with the Articles of Confederation until the actual quilting stitches of our Constitution could be put in place. It was a tedious process and many stitches were ripped out and resewn as the inexperienced, but determined quilters of liberty struggled to complete their endeavor.

At last the quilt was fit for use. But even in its newness it was blood-stained from lives pricked by the needle of Revolution. In the next ninety-five years it was repeatedly stained by the blood, tears, and sweat of American patriots, both famous and unknown. Then Civil War threatened to rend liberty's quilt in two. It was snagged by dissent and patched with reconciliation. Its strength was tested in both World Wars. Who had a right to claim this quilt of liberty? Whites wanted it for themselves, while their dark-skinned brothers fought for their share of the heritage. In the battle for civil rights, left singes from the fires of riots and cross burnings. Some thought Korea and Vietnam might rip the quilt to shreds. Political scandals such as the Tea Pot Dome incident and Watergate left it mud-spattered. It has always been marred by poverty and crime. The moth of apathy has time and again threatened to destroy it. And yet it has survived. All of this only makes it more precious to us who share in its inheritance—for it has endured time's tests.

We sometimes display liberty before the world as a flawless system, spotlighting its lofty ideals and shining successes. Like my elegant quilt, we hold it up for admiration. We praise it on the Fourth of July, parade it at the Olympics, and proudly point it out to foreign dignitaries. However, true liberty, which is the essence of our way of life, has proven durable though it bears the marks of use and age.

I have received a precious heritage. I shall wrap myself in the quilt of liberty. I will patch it and use it. I will do my best to protect and preserve it so that the next generation of Americans to whom I bequeath it will find the quilt of liberty proven, sturdy, and dependable still.

A COIN GRADING STANDARD

HON. ROBERT E. BADHAM

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of my colleagues the work being done by the Professional Coin Grading Service, which is headquartered in my district.

PCGS was created to protect the consumer from unscrupulous promoters, who had become a problem in the rare coin industry.

Prior to the founding of PCGS in February 1986, the rare coin market lacked a uniform grading system to provide a standard for the millions of Americans who purchase rare coins for investments or hobbies each year.

Now, PCGS, with more than 255 member coin dealers nationwide, has changed the climate in the rare coin industry. PCGS employs 21 leading coin experts as graders, each working independently to assess the grade or condition of the submitted coin, the grade being one of the most important factors in determining a rare coin's value. After a grade is assigned, the coin is sealed in a holder that is guaranteed to be tamper proof and photographed. The service guarantees its grading.

In 2 years, PCGS has graded 620,000 rare coins, with a declared wholesale value of $520 million. Today, estimates show that more than half of all rare coin transactions involve PCGS-graded coins.

Consumer protection takes many forms, including government advisories and publicity, but in this case protection for consumers is in the product, the guarantee and the reputation of PCGS.

PCGS has set a standard that can protect experts and novices alike. For this they are to be commended, and I am proud to have PCGS in my district.

WORLD POPULATION AWARENESS WEEK

HON. THOMAS R. CARPER

OF DELAWARE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 148, designating April 17-23 as World Population Awareness Week, I would like to take the opportunity to commend the Governor of Delaware, Mike Castle, and the people of Delaware for joining the fight to help solve the problem of overpopulation, by proclaiming April 17-23 as World Population Awareness Week in the State of Delaware.

There are over 5 billion people in the world today. The world population is expected to increase to 7 billion in 25 years, at a rate of 87 million people per year. Ninety-two percent of this growth is occurring in the least developed nations of the world, putting a severe strain on their fragile economies.

We cannot afford to ignore the problem and must act now to help Third World nations develop the resources they need to slow the population growth and meet the basic human needs of their citizens.

In recognition of Delaware's commitment to solving the devastating consequences of overpopulation, I ask unanimous consent that the statement by Governor Castle in observance of World Population Awareness Week be published in the RECORD in its entirety.

The statement follows:

STATEMENT IN OBSERVANCE OF WORLD POPULATION AWARENESS WEEK

Whereas, the world's population of more than five billion will, at its present growth rate, double in the next 40 years; and

Whereas, more than 90 percent of this unprecedented growth takes place in nations of the third world least able to accommodate such rapid expansion; and

Whereas, rapid population growth overwhelms the capacity of human societies to provide food, housing, education, employment and basic health services, and undermines economic development as well as social, cultural and political stability; and

Whereas, the massive proliferation of our human numbers places enormous strains on the global environment, contributing significantly to the depletion of natural resources, the conversion of cultivable fields and forests into wasteland and desert, the pollution of the earth's land and waters, and the destruction of its ozone layer; and

Whereas, the tragic results of the ever increasing imbalance between population and resources can be seen in the emergence of renewed famine in Africa and elsewhere; and

Whereas, the disastrous consequences that unchecked population growth portends for humankind and the natural environment can be averted by the extension of family planning services to the more than 500 million people in the developing world who need and want such services but lack the means or access to obtain them.

Now, Therefore, I, Michael N. Castle, Governor of the State of Delaware, do hereby proclaim the week of April 17-23, 1988, as: World Population Awareness Week in the State of Delaware, and call upon all of its citizens to reflect upon the consequences of world overpopulation and the opportunities to contribute to a solution.

TEMPLE BETH ABRAHAM TO HONOR FORMER SOVIET JEWISH REFUSENIKS YAKOV AND SVETLANA ALPERT

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, on April 22, 1988, Temple Beth Abraham in Tarrytown, NY, will be holding a dinner, honoring former Soviet Jewish refuseniks Yakov and Svetlana Alpert. This couple, who had been refused emigration permits for Israel since May 1976 on repeated grounds of state interest, were just recently allowed to reunite with loved ones in Israel.

Yakov Alpert, a renowned physicist, was associated with Soviet Academy of Sciences for 45 years. He was also a professor of radiophysics at Gorky State University and director of Izmiran. His expertise is in space plasma physics, propagation of radiowaves and of the ionsphere. Because of his reputation, he has been offered prestigious positions in France, Great Britain, and the United States. He has accepted a position with the Harvard/Smithsonian Astrological Observatory in the United States.

Active in scientific seminar in Moscow Professor Alpert and his wife, Dr. Svetlana Alpert, endured great hardships over the years, but their long wait has resulted in their presence in our midst at the Temple Beth Abraham dinner in their honor. We wish the Alperts much success and happiness in their new life and endeavors, though ever mindful of the hundreds of thousands of other Soviet Jews who still remain refused.

ETHICS IN CONGRESS ACT OF 1988

HON. LAMAR S. SMITH

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced legislation to extend the revolving door provisions of the Ethics in Government Act of 1988 to the legislative branch.

Americans expect honesty, integrity, and accountability from Members and employees of Congress. Until the legislative branch faces the same laws and standards of accountability as the executive branch, executive branch employees could well quote Benjamin Franklin:

> Clean your fingernails before you point at me.

INTRODUCTION

Our revolving door between private life and Government service is a distinctly American institution.

We benefit from regular infusions into Government of managerial and technical talent from the private sector. Congress has been careful to recognize that these individuals would not be so interested in temporarily working for the Government if their employment opportunities upon returning to the private sector were needlessly restricted.

Thus, the Congress has generally taken great care in crafting revolving door legislation so as not to unintentionally or unnecessarily bar the door.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

For nearly a century, legislation has been on the books restricting the relations of former Government employees with their agencies.

As to the needs for these statutes, three general statements emerged out of the congressional debate in 1872 on the first general statute on this subject.

The first was the problem of a former Government employee having inside information. At the time, the Congress was concerned that a former employee could take advantage of knowing what was needed to win a claim against the Government and, if he was unscrupulous, find witnesses to swear to the necessary facts.

A second need focused on the problem of switching sides in the claims process and thus, costing the Treasury money. The example used here is that of a clerk in the post office who discovers that many former postmasters are owed back pay. The clerk resigns and switches sides and represents the postmasters for a percentage.

And third, the debate defined the problem of continuing personal influence. Again, the Government employee resigns and switches sides and represents a claimant against the Government. In this instance, however, it is his particular knowledge of the Government's employees and how they might be pursuaded. One Senator observed:

> He goes right back into the Department hunts up the proper clerk in the bureau, and uses his influence upon him: I do not say always corruptly in the sense of using money, but uses the influence which naturally could be exercised by a man of capacity upon people with whom he had been associated.

These statements of the perceived need for statutes to restrict relations of former Government employees with the government remain the basis for our law today, including the Ethics in Government Act of 1978.

The first law in 1872 provided:

> (I)t shall not be lawful for any person . . . appointed as officer, clerk, or employee in any of the executive departments to act as counsel, attorney, or agent for prosecuting any claim against the United States which was pending in said Departments while he was said officer, clerk, or employee, nor in any manner, nor by any means, to aid in the prosecution of any such claim, within two years next after he shall have ceased to be such officer, clerk, or employee.

The statute, 5 U.S.C. section 99, remained virtually unchanged for 90 years.

In 1948, the statute was slightly broadened—section 284 of the Crimes and Criminal Procedure Act. It substituted the term "agency" for "department," included military officers in its coverage, and added misdemeanor criminal penalties.

Through the 1950's in a world radically different from that of the 1870's, a need to broaden the application of the law was gradually recognized and defined. Several important court cases,—particularly United States versus Bergson—were instrumental in doing this.

The case turned on the court's narrow definition of the term "claim" as "a demand against the Government for money or property." Effectively the court held that it would not through judicial interpretation expand the application of the old law.

This narrow definition did not serve to address the growing variety and complexity of the kinds of interests citizens felt they had in their dealings with their Government or the occasions for the exercise of undue influence.

Thus, in 1962, the Bribery, Graft and Conflicts of Interest Act, was enacted. Section 207 of that act is the basis for today's revolving door provisions. The act placed a life time prohibition on former Government officials representing persons on matters in which they participated "personally and substantially * * * through decision, approval, disapproval, recommendation, the rendering of advice, investigation or otherwise * * *."

It also set a 1 year prohibition on activities within one's official responsibility. This applied to direct administrative or operating authority—effectively to approve, disapprove, or otherwise direct Government action.

Also, it made the criminal sanctions felonies.

Then, 16 years later in response to widespread public concern about personal morality in Government, the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 was passed. It amended section 207 to add a cooling off period of 1 year for senior Government officials. They could not lobby their former agencies on any matter during the year.

The cooling off period was based on an assumption that former Government officials could exercise undue influence over former colleagues. For the first time, the law departed from the concept of a separate matter or even "official responsibility."

The bill also extended to 2 years the prohibition on lobbying on matters under one's official responsibility, and expanded the scope of the provison to include "aiding and assisting."

APPLICATION TO LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

It has been 10 years since Congress passed the Ethics in Government Act.

A widespread public perception that former Government employees in both the executive and legislative branches are wrongfully capitalizing on their Government experience for exorbitant fees is underlying a grassroots demand for legislative action.

In addition, there is perception that the Congress has not been willing to apply the laws it writes to itself and its former members.

> (The House of Representatives) can make no law which will not have its full operation on themselves and their friends, as well as on the great mass of society. This has always been deemed one of the strongest bonds by which human policy can connect the rulers and the people together.—Federalist paper No. 57 (1788).

The question is whether section 207 of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 should be amended to apply to the Congress.

I believe that it should be.

THE NEED

Our executive branch of Government experienced extraordinary change and growth in the fifties, sixties, and seventies in response to the needs of a changing society. Our legislative branch has gone through a similar restructuring in just the last 10 years.

Today, one bill can be more than a thousand pages. It can involve more taxpayer's money than the entire budget in 1978, the year the Ethics in Government Act was passed.

And along the way legislative conditions and practices have changed dramatically. Much more emphasis is placed on legislative staff to prepare the detailed and intricate documents involved in today's legislation. Reliance on staff is in fact a mandatory condition of the modern legislative process.

In this radically new environment, legitimate concerns may be raised concerning the possibility of undue influence.

For example, a senior staffer on a committee could have difficulty saying no to a former member or staff director who had hired him 5 years earlier. The request might be a slight modification of the committee's bill or report language, something that "didn't need to be run by the committee."

And it is not necessary to assume wrongful intent to realize this kind of potential for an undue influence on policy making. Recall the Senator defining the problem of continuing personal influence in the 1872 debate:

> I do not say corruptly * * * but uses the influence which naturally could be exercised by a man of capacity upon people with whom he had been associated.

Given that such opportunities—if seized upon—would gradually undermine the integrity of our representative form of government, it is the responsibility of the Members of Congress to establish reasonable safeguards to protect the integrity of the legislative branch.

DECISION MAKING

The Ethics in Government Act as it has evolved since 1872 has been applied to the executive branch and independent agencies.

The law has addressed executive kinds of decision making: approvals, disapprovals, and directing Government action on specific matters.

These are quite distinct from traditional perceptions of legislative decision making which is more likely to be characterized by words such as deliberation, debate, and consensus.

But the times they are a changing. And with them so are traditional perceptions of the legislative process. Increasingly, in our extraordinarily complex society much legislation which directly impacts our lives is being drafted at the staff level. It is becoming more and more difficult for the Congress to exercise oversight concerning the detailed provisions of more and more legislation.

And as these changes have overtaken the Congress in the last 10 years, more and more of the drafting has taken on some of the characteristics of executive decisionmaking. Staff members approve and disapprove. They act—sometimes making the final decision—on matters of substantial financial interest to our citizens. They even direct executive branch action.

They do all this as appointees of the people's elected representatives. They are accountable to the Member of Congress who has appointed them. In this regard, they are like their counterparts in the executive branch who are also political appointees but of the President.

Historically, revolving door legislation has been concerned with restricting undue influence on such executive branch administrative-type decisionmaking. It can and should be extended to shelter and assure the integrity of the same type decisionmaking in the legislative branch.

HERE, THE PEOPLE GOVERN

Application of the revolving door provisions must occur, however, with due respect for the Congress as the seat of the people's two elected legislative bodies.

For example, an extension that would prohibit a former Member from lobbying a sitting Member would in my view not serve a constructive public purpose.

Consider that such a provision in the law would necessarily have to be based on a policy assumption that a Member of Congress will violate his sworn public duty and be unduely influenced. In the name of a law—the Ethics Act—that purports to set a standard for public service, such an unfortunate extension of the act to the Congress actually would lower the public standard for representative government.

Trust in our representative form of government is vested in the special, even sacred relationship between the people and their elected representatives. Members are accountable to their constituents.

Such an extension would further tend to put restrictions on the ability of persons to obtain representation to petition their grievances to their Government. That also runs counter to established public policy.

THE ETHICS IN CONGRESS ACT OF 1988

To address the needs identified above while still being responsive to the Congress' constitutional status, I am proposing that former Members be prohibited for 2 years from lobbying staff on the standing committees on which they served during their last term on any matter within the jurisdiction of such committee.

Further, I am proposing that former senior committee staff be prohibited for 2 years from lobbying the staff on the committee on which they last served on any matters within that committee's jurisdiction.

The Ethics in Congress Act of 1988 also would prohibit a former officer of Congress from representing a person before any officer or employee of the House of Congress in which the individual served.

"Lobbying" is defined as in present law. That is, a former Member could contact committee staff on the standing committees on which he or she last served to make inquiries and monitor legislative activity. He could even lobby committee staffers on matters not within the committee's jurisdiction.

Former senior committee staff could contact members on the committees on which they served.

The act most nearly parallels the Ethics in Government Act 2-year prohibition on former executive branch officials. It is based on specific matters. In the instance of the executive branch official, it is matters under his official responsibility. In the instance of the former Member of Congress, it is matters within the jurisdiction of the standing committee on which he last served.

The focus is on restricting the behavior of the former Government official only in the matters in which he was most active while in the Government.

The hope is to address the problems of inside information and the exercise of undue influence.

I am including a copy of the text of the legislation and a comparison of my bill and other pending ethics legislation:

H.R. 4400

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Ethics in Congress Act of 1988".

SEC. 2. DISQUALIFICATION OF FORMER MEMBERS AND SENIOR OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF CONGRESS.

Section 207 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) Whoever, being—

"(A) a former Member of Congress, within 2 years after having been such a Member, represents any person by making any oral or written communication on behalf of any person to any employee of any standing committee upon which such Member served during the last term as such a Member concerning any matter within the jurisdiction of such committee;

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN THURMOND BILL AND ETHICS IN CONGRESS ACT OF 1988 AS THEY WOULD APPLY TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

PUBLIC POLICY

Thurmond bill: Assumes as a matter of public policy that a member of Congress would ignore his sworn public duties and be unduly influenced by a former colleague.

Smith bill: Assumes that members will abide by their sworn duties.

CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES

Thurmond bill: Restricts the ability of persons to obtain representation to petition their grievances to their government.

Smith bill: Does not restrict persons from retaining former members to represent them before the Federal Government, including Congress.

FORMER MEMBER'S RIGHTS

Thurmond bill: Restricts former members from pursuing political causes which may have been life-long pursuits.

Smith bill: Does not restrict a former member from pursuing political causes.

SCOPE OF PROPOSED CHANGES

Thurmond bill: Proposes a one year cooling off period. The application is government wide. It includes a bar from using either one's knowledge—general or specific—or one's understanding of process. It is all inclusive. Its scope is so broad as to pose at least an initial threat to former members employment opportunities.

Smith bill: Does not restrict any employment opportunities. Focuses on narrowly defined situations of historically perceived potential exercises of undue influence in representing a person, consistent with the manner in which the law has been applied to the executive branch.

GENUINE THANKFULNESS

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, as the Representative of California's 38th Congressional District, I have the great privilege of representing a constituency with diverse ethnic and cultural backgrounds. One group, which I am extremely proud to represent, are the men, women, and children who fled Communist oppression in Vietnam, and came to the United States with the hope and dream of becoming dedicated and productive citizens of our great country. And indeed they have.

As the representative of a Vietnamese community, I know how grateful they are to the American people for opening our arms and allowing them to share the riches and freedom of our Nation. But for my fellow Americans who have not had the opportunity to know the Vietnamese, I would like to submit into the RECORD a thank you letter to the American people from Yem Pham, a 99-year-old Vietnamese woman who has been able to live her golden years in peace and freedom as a result of America's generosity.

Mr. Speaker, like Yem Pham, I salute the people of our great Nation.

APRIL 5, 1988.

Hon. ROBERT DORNAN,
U.S. Congressional District, Garden Grove, CA.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN DORNAN: Pardon me for my rudeness and primitive behavior in addressing you, but it is just that I can not resist to write about my appreciation to you and your government.

My name is Yem Pham. I was born in May 15, 1888. Certainly you know that I am reaching my centennial birthday very soon. Before I can celebrate this very special occasion, I would like to express my deepest appreciation to you. You have made this possible for me. You have rewarded me with many essential provisions and services. They are the resettlement programs, health care services and the love of American people.

You and your government have given me an opportunity to prolong my life and a chance to live in this beautiful country. My life is enhanced each day and every new day to come. I have realized that at my age there is no ability to pay but to benefit and to receive. Because of my inability to pay, I have to write you and your government the most sincere thankfulness for your health services, assistances and love through many years.

Please accept my genuine thankfulness. May God grant you peace, wisdom and longevity. Your acceptance and response of my appreciation will be rewarding for me, my children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, great-great-grand-children, great-great-grant-grandchildren and friends. I am looking forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely yours,

YEM PHAM.

A TRIBUTE TO U.S. AMBASSADOR MAXWELL M. RABB

HON. CHARLES W. STENHOLM

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 18, 1988

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the Members of the House today to pay tribute to the longest serving U.S. Ambassador to Italy in the history of our diplomatic relations with that country.

Maxwell M. Rabb's tenure as American Ambassador to Italy began in June 1981. His dedication and respect to his diplomatic role, to the men and women with whom he worked, and most of all, to the country he served has been exemplary. Furthermore, Ambassador Rabb has won friends across the political spectrum, which has served him well during several rather tense moments in his tenure.

Just 2 weeks ago, I had the memorable pleasure and privilege of attending the full honors ceremony in honor of Ambassador Rabb conducted at Camp Ederle. Such a nice tribute seemed most fitting for such a distinguished diplomat who has served with such dignity under Democrats and Republicans alike from President Eisenhower to Johnson.

Most deservingly, Max Rabb has been the recipient of many notable awards and honors over the years. In 1982, he was named Cavaliere di Gran Croce by Italian President Sandro Pertini, an honor awarded to foreigners for distinguished contributions to the Italian Republic.

During his tenure as Ambassador, Italy and the United States have worked closely on several projects of major importance: The deployment of intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Italy; three multinational peace forces sent by Western powers to the Middle East; a new extradition treaty which has permitted joint action in prosecuting internal drug traffickers and organized crime; and numerous bilateral accords in the arts, sciences, and business.

Mr. Rabb has served as President of the U.S. Committee for Refugees, a member of the board of directors of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, vice president of the American Immigration and Citizenship Conference, and a member of the boards of directors of many educational, charitable institutions, and business corporations. Moreover, his charming wife, Ruth, has been deeply involved in her own projects dealing with the development of drug rehabilitation programs and coordinating the various stately dinners and engagements held at their magnificent residence, the Villa Taverna.

Mr. Speaker, let me conclude my remarks by extending my appreciation to Max and Ruth Rabb for all they have done—and been—and warmest best wishes for their future.

REMARKS OF SECRETARY FREDERICK P. SALVUCCI ON THE DEATH OF THE HONORABLE JAMES J. HOWARD

HON. JOE MOAKLEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues the remarks of my good friend, Frederick P. Salvucci, secretary of transportation in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts on the occasion of the death of our colleague, Representative James Howard of New Jersey. Fred worked closely with the Massachusetts Delegation and Chairman Howard on a wide variety of transportation-related projects in the Commonwealth and throughout New England in the course of Jim's chairmanship of Public Works and Transportation.

The material follows:

REMARKS OF FREDERICK P. SALVUCCI ON THE DEATH OF CONGRESSMAN JAMES HOWARD

Some men and women, when they are elected to Congress, bring with them a vision of America that is far removed from parochial concerns. These public servants see America as a partnership of truly united states, each with shared goals and mutual interests. Those who have such a vision face the challenge of implementing their ideas, and those who do so become national leaders. Jim Howard was that kind of leader.

Jim Howard was national leader not merely by virtue of his rank in Congress but because he had a forward looking program for America and carried it out. That program was founded on public works and its goal was to build and maintain a national infrastructure that would sustain growth into the next century. He understood that public works projects are essential to the national economy.

He also understood that the bottom line product of all public works projects is service. Whether it be mass transit improvements or water treatment plants or completing the interstate highway system, the real output of public works is service. In this respect, Jim Howard touched the lives of millions of Americans who enjoyed the benefits of a national infrastructure on a par with none other.

Jim Howard was a friend to Massachusetts, but he was more than that. For those of us who shared his vision and enjoyed the generosity of his time, he was an inspiration and our lives as public servants have been forever enriched.

WYOMING VALLEY BOXING HALL OF FAME

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to bring to your attention three new additions to the Wyoming Valley Boxing Hall of Fame. The home of Joe Palooka, the Wyoming Valley has produced some of the finest boxers of this country. I am glad to take this opportunity to give a brief biographical description of each of the fine men recently chosen to enter the hall of fame.

Mike Bernstein was known as the dean of boxing writers in Pennsylvania. From 1920 to 1955 his weekly column in the Sunday Independent of Wilkes-Barre was read avidly by sports fans throughout the State. As a young boy he was a fixture at local gyms and eventually became a boxing judge.

Charley "Chuckie" Bloss, of Hanover Township, first accompanied his cousin to Joe Rodano's gym when he was just 14. As an amateur for Roy Hatcher he won 90 of 97 fights, then turned pro in 1950. The late Mike Bernstein described him as follows: "The young man is a natural born mittster, with a terrific wallop in both paws. When he unlimbers his heavy artillery, he is really a hurricane in boxing trunks." Mr. Bloss now operates a barbershop in Wilkes-Barre.

Frank Jayne, of Plymouth, had an enviable record of 96 wins, 5 draws, and 29 losses during his 8-year professional career during the "golden years" of boxing in the 1940's. His successful career led the U.S. Army to assign him as a boxing instructor in the special forces in Japan, where he garnered the Far East bantamweight and featherweight sectional championships. Although he retired from boxing in the 1950's, Jayne continued to train boxers from northeastern Pennsylvania.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honor to take this opportunity to draw the attention of my colleagues in the House of Representatives to the accomplishments of these three men whose careers have earned them places of honor in the Wyoming Valley Boxing Hall of Fame.

POST, AT LAST, GOES PUBLIC WITH ANTIFIREARM STAND

HON. CLYDE C. HOLLOWAY

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. HOLLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to share with my distinguished colleagues my gratitude to the editorial writers of the Washington Post. I must commend the Post for its decision to finally make public its longstanding campaign against firearm ownership. I refer to an editorial in the February 22, 1988 edition of the newspaper.

The article accurately reflects the Post's longstanding antigun sentiment. Accordingly, I am pleased to submit for my colleagues' review a story which appeared in the April issue of the American Hunter. The article, by Mr. J. Warren Cassidy makes clear the antifirearm rhetoric which has regularly appeared in the Washington Post.

POST AT LAST, GOES PUBLIC WITH ANTIFIREARM STAND

They finally came out of the closet.

The Washington Post, in an editorial on February 22 entitled "Why Police Want Gun Laws," at long last dropped all pretense to sympathy for the law-abiding gun owner and stated publicly what they always have believed privately—that the average American should not be allowed to own handguns.

In their third paragraph they write, "The NRA's diehard opponents of reasonable controls on concealable weapons would like you to believe that because police can't be everywhere and protect everyone, the next best thing for any citizen who wants one is a handgun ready to fight back. But how easily should anyone—trained or untrained, sane or insane, with or without criminal convictions—be able to buy a handgun?"

There it is, my friends, in black and white, stripped of all the Post's usual drivel on opposing us only for the "extreme stands" we take on issues such as "waiting periods, plastic guns, machine guns, armor-piercing bullets," etc. What they have said is that even if you are trained, sane and law-abiding, it should be difficult, if not impossible, for you to buy a handgun. Worse yet, if you consider protecting yourself by means of a firearm, you're not only suspect, but probably not too intelligent, and even a little immoral.

These editorial hypocrites, in an attempt to split our ranks and upset our historic friendship with law enforcement, have cried for years that if NRA were only "reasonable" about the above issues then all would be well, and they would stop trying to deprive us of our civil rights.

Well, so much for the Post's credibility. No longer should we be subjected to their phony pleas for background checks, psychiatric exams or mandatory testing before firearm purchases can be made. I repeat. They declare that despite training, sanity and respect for the law it should be next to impossible for us to buy guns.

I thank them for finally putting in print their true feelings. Now some of those in Congress who had begun to question the tougher stands we have been forced to take will know that we were not exaggerating about the antigunners' ultimate aim of eliminating the private ownership of all firearms.

Just as important to us will be the light that dawns in the minds of those NRA members who have written to me over many years with the collective opinion that if only NRA would be "fair and understanding of the media" our troubles would go away.

A lesson I learned long ago in our never-ending battle is this: The devout antigunner doesn't pretend that the length of the barrel, the type action, the materials used in manufacture or the length of the waiting period has anything to do with his or her stated purpose. They don't hide behind the hypocritical arguments of Pete Shields, Sarah Brady and Handgun Control, Inc. No, this collection of zealots accepts the undiluted stand of Michael Beard and the National Coalition to Ban Handguns. That is "ban," folks, not "control."

It must be obvious that I'm elated over this public confession on the part of the Post. Our lobbyists will bring it to the attention of every Congressional office, and the exposure will have great impact.

Just as the newspaper has been misleading its readers, so has it misled our country's leaders. This should make our job so much easier.

Thanks, Washington Post. We needed that!

WORLD POPULATION AWARENESS WEEK PROCLAIMED IN FLORIDA APRIL 17 TO 23, 1988

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Governor of the State of Florida, the Honorable Bob Martinez, and to endorse his efforts in issuing a State proclamation on the occasion of World Population Awareness Week. Special attention will be given to activities during this week of April 17 to 23, 1988, highlighting the consequences of overpopulation on global resources, the environment, health, and poverty. For many years I have supported domestic and international family planning programs which offer voluntary assistance to those who desire it. Indeed, adequate family planning is closely related to maternal and infant mortality as well as to child survival. I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to bring this State proclamation to the attention of my colleagues by inserting its text into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

PROCLAMATION

Whereas, the world's population of more than five billion will, at its present growth rate, double in the next 40 years; and

Whereas, more than 90 percent of this unprecedented growth takes place in nations of the third world least able to accommodate such rapid expansion; and

Whereas, rapid population growth overwhelms the capacity of human societies to provide food, housing, education, employment and basic health services, and undermines economic development as well as social, cultural and political stability; and

Whereas, the massive proliferation of our human numbers places enormous strains on the global environment, contributing significantly to the depletion of natural resources, the conversion of cultivable fields and forests into wasteland and desert, the pollution of the earth's land and waters, and the destruction of its ozone layer; and

Whereas, the tragic results of the ever increasing imbalance between population and resources can be seen in the emergence of renewed famine in Africa and elsewhere; and

Whereas, the disastrous consequences that unchecked population growth portends for humankind and the natural environment can be averted by the extension of family planning services to the more than 500 million people in the developing world who need and want such services but lack the means or access to obtain them;

Now, therefore, I, Bob Martinez, by virtue of the authority vested in me as Governor of the State of Florida, do hereby proclaim April 17-23, 1988, as World Population Awareness Week in Florida and call upon all of its citizens to reflect upon the consequences of world overpopulation and the opportunities to contribute to a solution.

TRIBUTE TO WALTER SONDHEIM, JR.; 1988 HOUSING MAN OF THE YEAR

HON. KWEISI MFUME

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. MFUME. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one of Baltimore City's longtime housing and community development leader's, Mr. Walter Sondheim, Jr. On Thursday, April 28, 1988, Mr. Sondheim will be honored as the 1988 Housing Man of the Year.

This prestigious award is given annually by the National Housing Conference, in recognition of the accomplishments of those individuals who have taken it upon themselves to promote decent, affordable and available housing for the citizens of their respective communities.

The selection of Mr. Sondheim for this year's award, probably could not have gone to a more deserving candidate. A former chairman of the Baltimore Urban Renewal and Housing Commission, and the Housing Authority of Baltimore City, 1957-63, Mr. Sondheim currently serves as the senior adviser to the Greater Baltimore Committee, and has chaired the Charles Center Inner Harbor Management and Market Center Development Commission, in addition to serving as an executive assistant to the mayor, 1984-86.

A native Baltimorean, Mr. Sondheim's innovative leadership and vision helped fuel the revitalization that has engulfed Baltimore City for most of the past two decades. Baltimore's "renaissance" has become a showcase for contemporary American urban renewal, and has augmented the State's competitive economy by attracting many foreign and domestic businesses to our city. Additionally, through projects such as the Homesteading Program, where low-income and other disadvantaged persons can renovate and later buy available city housing units—housing leaders such as Mr. Sondheim have set out to clear away the barriers toward home ownership, and to build encouraging bridges of support for Baltimore City's citizenry.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the entire House will join me in saluting a true American patriot. For his selfless and dedicated support to the citizens and city of Baltimore, I take great pride in honoring Mr. Walter Sondheim, Jr., a man who will long be remembered as a friend to all communities in Baltimore.

H.R. 4397; THE FLAT RATE TAX ACT OF 1988

HON. DAVID DREIER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, by now, all taxpayers are familiar with the horrors and surprises of filing their tax returns under the new tax system. Congress, in considering the Tax Reform Act of 1986, had one of the few opportunities to bring about real and lasting reform to our Nation's Tax Code.

Instead, the Tax Reform Act, which I opposed, created a complicated maze of new regulations and paperwork for individuals and businesses. There have been 2,704 changes in the Internal Revenue Code, 42 new regulations, 65 new revenue announcements, 32 new revenue rulings, and 48 new tax forms, with no end it sight.

Furthermore, there is no real reduction in the overall tax burden for most Americans. The new code is complex and technical, and it is not fair to many middle-income taxpayers. Tax reform has become frustrating and confusing, and millions of Americans are beginning to show their dissatisfaction.

As a simple and equitable alternative, I have introduced H.R. 4397, the Flat Rate Tax Act of 1988. My bill calls for a flat rate tax system which would broaden the tax base and lower marginal rates for all individuals to 15 percent.

I have come to believe that a flat rate tax system is the best approach for bringing real and genuine reform to the Tax Code. It would eliminate the tremendous complexity that the average taxpayer faces in preparing a tax return. It would also improve the performance of the economy because lower marginal tax rates will create greater incentives for productivity and growth.

With a flat rate tax system, we would have a code that taxpayers will understand and perceive to be fair. Everyone would pay the same rate, with the exception of those families living below the poverty line. It is a reflection of what many people believe is genuine tax reform.

Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that Congress reconsider tax reform because we clearly did not do the job right the first time. In fact, the Tax Reform Act has only hampered our efforts to restore public confidence in our tax system. A flat rate tax system, such as the one incorporated in H.R. 4397, appears to be the best approach for achieving a fair and simple Tax Code.

TRIBUTE TO THE KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS, NILES, OHIO

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in order to pay tribute to Niles Council No. 1681 of the Knights of Columbus of my 17th Congressional District of Ohio. Council No. 1681 recently celebrated 75 years of community service with a special banquet on April 10, 1988.

Since its inception, the council has followed the orders policy toward patriotism by taking part in First World War efforts. During the Second World War, the Niles Council had 37 of its members serving in the U.S. Armed Forces. In 1940, Council No. 1681 had 33 members and steadily grew. Its membership in 1983 reached 483. The Niles Knights of Columbus Ladies was established in 1951 and continues to be an active part of the Knights of Columbus.

The council has always been involved in charitable activities throughout the community. The members organized and operated a blood bank until the Red Cross established one for the entire area. From 1977 through 1979, the members built the Bocchi Building, which is still the finest Bocchi Court in Northeast Ohio. The council is also constantly busy with measure up drives, Ohio charity drives, and other programs in the community.

I had the privilege of attending this special anniversary event and honoring three of the council's most distinguished members. I presented awards to Adone Calderone, Grand Knight; Anthony Yannone, past Grand Knight; and Greg Colucci, past Grand Knight. Like so many of the members who have served in this organization before them, these men have gone out of their way to provide the people of their community with leadership and dedication.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I pay tribute to the Niles Council No. 1681 of the Knights of Columbus.

HON. ERNEST L. KONNYU

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. KONNYU. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituency, I would like to thank Congressman SMITH and the other subcommittee members for this opportunity to submit testimony regarding funding for the establishment and operation of West Coast Export Assistance Centers.

Last year, I cosponsored legislation requiring the Department of Commerce to establish and operate a Western regional export license office. My purpose today is to request the funding for these west coast offices which will provide quick access to advice and counseling on U.S. export control laws.

In fiscal year 1985, the Department of Commerce's Office of Export Administration received 125,000 license requests. Of this number, 25 percent came from California alone. As we begin to see our economy driven by exports, we realize that America's high technology industry permeates every facet thereof. Our high technology industry is the cornerstone of our Nation's economy, and Silicon Valley is the heart and soul of this industry. Within this state-of-the-art technology base lies the key to restoring U.S. competitiveness in the international arena.

Unfortunately foreign competition is not the only factor in gauging the marketability of U.S. products. Export control policy has a major impact on U.S. competitiveness. Over the past decade, the Federal Government has increased the administrative and competitive burden on exporters through stricter licensing requirements, export controls, and total embargoes.

Last year, the National Academy of Sciences documented that the complexity and inherent confusion involved in the export licensing process results in billions of dollars in lost sales each year. Countless small businesses have decided against the option of exporting based solely upon the lack of accessible direction. Instead of discouraging them, we should be welcoming potential exporters with open arms and make it convenient and desirable to make money overseas.

West coast companies are faced with an even greater disadvantage, however, because the only place they can obtain the necessary information and assistance is located in Washington, DC. The lack of qualified commerce personnel on the west coast discriminates against a very large segment of the U.S. high technology industry. With the west coast high technology community generating almost 40 percent of all export licenses, it is apparent what impact such a disadvantage can wield.

Only 7 years ago, the industry had a $27 billion surplus. Yet, this decade marks the first time in American history that the U.S. high technology industry has posted a trade deficit, and 1986 was that fateful year. A resurgence in American exports is being attributed to 1987 being a surplus year.

While the establishment of west coast export assistance centers will not eliminate the U.S. trade deficit, it is a step in the right direction. Increased exports are critical to economic vitality and will result in increased jobs for Americans. I believe it is time that we reinvest in America's efforts to restore U.S. competitiveness in the international market.

BOLEY INC. GIVES MANY IN PINELLAS COUNTY NEW HOPE FOR THE FUTURE

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege earlier this month to take part in ceremonies dedicating the Ruth G. Mosher Apartments in St. Petersburg, FL, which are operated by Boley, Inc., to house mentally handicapped residents of Pinellas County.

The 20 unit complex is one of two recently opened by Boley, Inc., to house 40 mentally handicapped individuals. The second building, located on a different site, is named for Bessie Boley, the founder of Boley, Inc. The project, which was four years in the making, was funded by a $1.5-million grant from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Boley, Inc., began in 1970 as a group home for emotionally disabled men. Since then, it has grown in size and stature, and today is recognized as one of our Nation's leaders in providing services for mentally ill persons. Boley's programs have shown that helping people in the community rather than in State mental institutions can result in a considerable savings to the State and its taxpayers.

In addition to developing a program that saves taxpayer dollars, Boley has also instilled a new sense of pride and excitement in its residents. Through rehabilitative training workshops, vocational training programs, and job placement activities, Boley enables the mentally handicapped to learn skills that give them self-confidence and enable them to become productive, tax paying members of our community.

Mike Scanlon, of the Jacksonville HUD office, and former St. Petersburg mayor Corinne Freeman joined in the ceremonies to dedicate this new project. Together we applauded David T. Richards, president of Boley Inc., the board of directors, Paula Hays, the executive director, and the many individuals who contributed their time and money to make this project and nonprofit organization a success. Boley, Inc., has become the largest agency of its kind in Florida, and through its residential and rehabilitative programs, its clients and residents have a new hope in themselves and in the future.

A CONGRESSIONAL SALUTE TO DR. MILFORD G. WYMAN

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding man in my district, Dr. Milford G. Wyman. Dr. Wyman will be honored on Saturday, April 23, 1988, at the 20th anniversary party of the San Pedro Heart Foundation. I am pleased to have the opportunity to honor him on this auspicious occasion.

Dr. Wyman has been a resident of our community for more than 30 years, active in many facets of community life. But his greatest contribution by far has been the gift of his talents as a doctor of internal medicine, and a specialist in cardiovascular disease. Dr. Wyman's achievements in medicine are almost too numerous to count, but I will attempt to delineate his distinguished career in this address that is all too brief to do him justice.

Dr. Wyman is currently the director of the coronary care unit of the San Pedro Peninsula

Hospital, a position he has held since 1966. In addition to that, he is the senior attending physician of the coronary care unit at the University of Southern California in the Los Angeles Medical Center. Since 1986, he has been the chairman of the Cardiac Care Standards for Coronary Care Units of the American Heart Association.

Dr. Wyman is not only a practicing physician, but an academician as well. From 1956-58, he was an assistant professor in preventive medicine and public health at the University of California at Los Angeles. He was also an assistant clinical professor of medicine at the University of Southern California from 1966-70. He was the senior member of the arrhythmia control team at the University of Southern California at the Los Angeles Medical Center from 1962-75, and is currently the senior attending physician of the coronary care unit at the same hospital. He has written extensively on many aspects of cardiology, and has published more than 50 articles on this subject. In addition, he is a reviewer to the editorial office of several medical journals, including Heart and Lung, Clinician, and the American Heart Journal. He has also been a cardiology consultant to the Rand Corp., the U.S. Army, and the Squibb Executive Advisory Council of 1982.

Besides his practice and his work in academia, Dr. Wyman has committed himself to organizations that promote coronary care and the study of cardiovascular disease. He was the project director of the Coronary Care Physician and Nurse Training Program from 1969 to 1972, the chairman of the Coronary Care Committee of the Los Angeles Heart Association from 1968-1971, and the chairman of the section of cardiovascular disease at San Pedro Peninsula Hospital from 1976 to present. As if that were not enough, he is the founder of the Confederation of Conorary Care Unit Directors, and served as head of that organization from 1969-72.

Dr. Wyman is an incredible man; he has sought to promote coronary care as an administrator, in the world of academia and in practice as a physician. Not many people have the talent, the energy or the ability to work for a cause in three different ways. Dr. Wyman is the exception to that rule. The entire community is fortunate to have such a distinguished individual in their midst. My wife, Lee, joins me in extending our warmest congratulations to Dr. Milford Wyman on this special day. We wish Milford, his wife, Rea, his sons, Matthew, Michael, and Mark, and his grandchildren, Sarah and Emma all the best in the years to come.

A TRIBUTE TO GUNTHER STARKER

HON. RICHARD T. SCHULZE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, Charles F. Kettering once wrote "The person who doesn't know something can't be done will often find a way to go ahead and do it." Such is the story of Gunther Starker, a highly skilled Austrian mountaineer and ski instructor from the famed Kitzbuhel Ski School. This extraordinary individual, who has scaled many a Himalayan peak, first came to southeastern Pennsylvania 25 years ago to establish a ski school in an area where mild temperatures and minimal snowfall often inhibit winter sports. Since that first season in 1963, Mr. Starker returned every year to the Spring Mountain ski area in Upper Salford Township to teach downhill skiing.

Mr. Starker has recently announced his decision to retire as director of the ski school which bears his name and return to Austria. Although Mr. Starker will not be instructing the skiers who brave Spring Mountain next year, he will certainly be present in the minds of those whose lives he has influenced. For in the 25 years Mr. Starker taught skiing at Spring Mountain he touched the hearts and souls of those who came under his instruction. Indeed, he and his school have become institutions to those who ski Spring Mountain.

On behalf of those who have had the pleasure of being acquainted with Mr. Starker, I wish to thank him for his many years of instruction and wish him the best of luck in his future endeavors.

SALUTE TO THE SOUTH CHRISTIAN SAILORS 1988 MICHIGAN CLASS B BASKETBALL CHAMPIONS

HON. PAUL B. HENRY

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, on March 26, 1988, in a tense, filled-to-capacity arena, the South Christian High School Sailors of Grand Rapids, MI, in a fiercely fought battle, came from behind in overtime to win the 1988 Michigan Class B High School Basketball Championship. Dedicated to bringing a State basketball championship to the Grand Rapids area for the first time in 15 years, the Sailors played superbly, much to the delight of thousands of fans dressed in white shorts sporting "Go Sailors" logos.

Led by "Coach of the Year" Tom Dykema and Matt Steigenga, winner of the coveted "Mr. Basketball" award, Michigan's top basketball, honor, the Sailors put on an awesome display of teamwork and coordination in winning the championship. Coming on the heels of an overtime win in a semifinal game the day before, the Sailor's played with a determination and a desire to win equal to none, hitting an amazing 64 percent of their shots from the floor. This phenomenal display of teamwork put the cap on a near perfect season and was a dream come true for the players and coaches alike.

Mr. Speaker, each and every member of the team contributed in his own special way to the successes enjoyed over the 1987-88 basketball season. It gives me great pleasure to honor each of the following players, fine coaching staff and team managers: Jeff Baker, Steve Bonnema, Steve Brinks, Brent Dykema, Chris Fridsma, Daryl Kooiker, Greg Mast, Kevin Smith, Matt Steigenga, Craig Tibbee, Jeff VanNoord, Cam Vostad, Chad Vredevoogd, Tim Werkema, and Mark Wiergenga; coach: Tom Dykema; JV coach: Ken Hiskes; managers: Jack Pott, Alan Slotterbeek, and John Stroo.

Winning the championship takes hard work, determination, spirit, and ability, but most important, a cooperative team effort. Playing their hearts out, these young players succeeded in reaching the pinnacle and to quote Coach Dykema, "It doesn't get any better than this."

Mr. Speaker and colleagues, please join with me in expressing heartiest congratulations to Michigan's 1988 Class B High School Basketball Champions—the Sailors of South Christian High School.

GRATITUDE TO THE RESIDENTS FOR A MORE BEAUTIFUL PORT WASHINGTON

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the accomplishments of a group of concerned citizens in Long Island's Third Congressional District.

Five years ago, the Residents for a More Beautiful Port Washington embarked on a unique cooperative venture with the U.S. Postal Service. Their goal was to beautify their post office facility.

To achieve this, more than 2,000 citizens of Port Washington privately raised more than $5,000 for this project. They worked tirelessly, with the cooperation of Postmaster Ted Augustson, to implement this beautification program.

New trees, benches, shrubbery, and wastebaskets were added to the area surrounding the Port Washington Post Office. The result is one of the most attractive post offices in New York State.

I am proud of this accomplishment. The members of Residents for a More Beautiful Port Washington have demonstrated that the qualities of community spirit and volunteerism are still very much alive and well in America today.

The former U.S. Postmaster General, Preston R. Tisch, also recognized this exemplary project. He recently wrote, "I, too, am proud of this accomplishment, and hope that other citizens' organizations will take the kind of pride in their communities as that expressed by the Residents for a More Beautiful Port Washington."

As a gesture of its gratitude, the Postal Service will hold a Community Appreciation Day to honor this outstanding community organization. I would like to add my appreciation and gratitude to the Residents for a More Beautiful Port Washington, and I hope they continue their vital and necessary community work.

COMMEMORATING THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE TOWN OF ERVING

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, last weekend the town of Erving celebrated its 150th anniversary. I want to offer my sincerest congratulations to Erving on the achievement of this milestone. While the festivities commemorating the town's 150 years will continue all year, last weekend this Franklin County community celebrated in a unique way—in a way that tells us a lot about the town of Erving. Aside from dining and dancing together last weekend, the people of Erving lent historic possessions and photographs for a display at the Erving Elementary School, so that their children may learn more about the origins of their town. Later this year, neighbors will open their historic homes to each other to share in the rich history of this tightly knit community.

It is telling that these good folks came together to celebrate. The citizens of Erving pride themselves on their close community of neighbors. Pride and camaraderie are strong bonds which bring them together to share in the history of this hard-working New England mill town. These are truly American people.

Mr. Speaker, in 1752, John Erving first purchased the land that now bears his name. However, the first settler didn't arrive until 1801, when Col. Asaph White, supervising the construction of the 5th Massachusetts Turnpike, settled in Erving. There he built a house, a sawmill, and a dam across Miller's River. The abundance of lumber and water power attracted other settlers. Its numbers still growing, the town of Erving was incorporated in 1838.

In those early days, Erving was a lumber town, with numerous woodworking shops, a chair factory and a piano case factory. The Erving Paper Co. was founded in 1905 and has grown to become one of Franklin County's major employers. This firm is a principal supplier of paper goods to the Nation and the Nation's Government. Paper napkins from Erving bearing the Great Seal of the United States can be found in American embassies around the world.

This hardworking community has also been a responsible one. The town's commitment to its environment began when the Civilian Conservation Corps first beautified Laurel Lake and the surrounding Erving State Forest in the 1930's. More recently, the town and the industries of Erving have launched a program to clean up the river that has allowed its paper industry to flourish. The town Selectmen, the industries and the Federal Government combined forces to return Miller's River to a clean and natural state so that it could be used for recreation and the enjoyment of all.

I remember the honor of participating in the celebrations marking the opening of the wastewater treatment plant in 1975. This ambitious town wasn't content with resting on its laurels. The same celebration marked the ground-breaking of yet another sewage treatment plant. Just 2 years later, I was back for the opening of that plant, which today refines 30 million gallons of waste water a day from the Erving Paper Mill as well as domestic sewage from the town of Erving.

Since that time Erving has been able to add to these facilities in order to continue the fight against pollution. I proudly salute this town which has committed itself to maintaining a clean, healthy environment, and hold it up to you today as a model for others to follow.

While a look at Erving's past shows a strong history of community spirit, I urge you to visit the town today. It is a real pleasure. The present citizens of Erving are as strong, hard-working, and community-minded as their forebearers, with the same commitment to maintaining the beauty and friendliness of their beloved town.

Mr. Speaker, the celebration planned for this 150th anniversary is yet another example of the commitment felt by the residents of Erving to their community. Without a doubt, the people of Erving have banded together to create a sense of community not found in most areas. The people of Erving have good reason to be proud of their town, and I am pleased to pay tribute to Erving on the occasion of this auspicious 150th anniversary.

JOHN L. DeSMET RECEIVES GEICO PUBLIC SERVICE AWARD

HON. G.V. (SONNY) MONTGOMERY

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, each year since 1980, the Government Employees Insurance Co. [GEICO] has recognized Federal employees for their outstanding contributions to and special achievements in the Federal system. Award recipients represent the very best in Government. GEICO Public Service Award recipients are selected based upon their contribution to the public good and the extent to which they serve as an inspiration to others, thereby bringing credit to the Federal service.

Five times since the award's inception, employees of the Veterans' Administration have been recognized for their particular contributions to that fine system and to our Nation's veterans whom it serves.

This year, on March 14, the GEICO Public Service Award in the field of alcoholism prevention and treatment was given to Mr. John L. DeSmet, chief of the Alcohol and Dependency Treatment Program at the Veterans' Administration Medical Center in Roseburg, OR. Mr. DeSmet was recognized for his contribution both professionally at the VA hospital where he has served since 1975, as well as in the community at large. He has organized VA alcohol and drug treatment programs in his medical district into an informal network to better enable them to respond to patient needs. He has also served on many community boards and task forces oriented toward the problems of alcoholism and drug abuse. And he devotes much of his free time to provide alcohol education in schools and other community settings.

Mr. Speaker, alcoholism touches the lives of some 17 million Americans. The tragedy of this disease cannot be overstated. Therefore, the contributions of John DeSmet and others like him who have devoted their lives to assisting individuals afflicted with alcoholism to help them overcome that burden are most significant.

Mr. Speaker, John DeSmet typifies the outstanding commitment, dedication and skill reflected in the performance of so many Veterans' Administration employees. Their dedication to serving that very special clientele, our Nation's veterans, is an occasion of pride to me personally as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, and should be for all Americans as well.

THE 90TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE TUNA CLUB

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the 90th anniversary of the Tuna Club of Avalon, Santa Catalina Island, CA, I extend my sincere congratulations to the oldest fishing club in the United States.

The Tuna Club board of directors, President B.G. Williams, Vice President Jim Martin, Secretary Harry Westover, Treasurer Albert Herbold, and Director David Denholm, lead a current membership of over 200 honorary, senior, active, and associate members.

The Tuna Club was organized June 15, 1898, by "the little band of six," under the leadership of Dr. Charles Fredrick Holder. Dr. Holder, rightfully called the "father of the Tuna Club," had heard of a wonderful game fish, then called "leaping tuna," that surrounded Santa Catalina Island. He used his experience with salmon to work out tackle that would be of sufficient strength to cope with the mighty fish. It was his desire to give the quarry a better than even chance of survival, matching human skills against the instinct and strength of the fish. On June 1, 1898, Dr. Holder successfully landed a 183-pound tuna with rod and reel, the first such catch on record.

The charter members decided "the object of this club is the protection of game fishes of the State of California and to discourage hand line fishing as unsportsmanlike and against the public interest."

Little has changed in the goals of the Tuna Club in the ensuing 90 years. Current Tuna Club angling and tournament rules state "the underlying spirit of angling should be that it is a sport in which the skill of the angler is pitted against instinct and strength of the fish," to that end, it is common for Tuna Club members to fish for and catch tuna and marlin with line testing 12, 20, or 30 pounds. These fish can weigh in exces of 250 pounds. In addition to fishing with light tackle, Tuna Club members in the interest of conservation, consistently catch and release more game fish annually than they take.

Salt water fishing today is recognized as a multi-million dollar industry. Tackle and fishing gear as well as boats, electronics, travel, and resorts benefit from the thousands of sport fishermen that pursue the sport. In no small part, the Tuna Club of Avalon, with its humble beginning in 1898, has contributed much to the sport.

A TIME FOR ACTION ON CYPRUS

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions during the last 14 years, the United States Congress has expressed its frustration over the continuing crisis in Cyprus. Today, despite our efforts and the efforts of the world community generally, Cyprus and its people remain artificially divided. Every day that passes increases the possibility that Cyprus will never celebrate the reunification of its people, the removal of the Turkish occupation force, and the restoration of its sovereignty.

Unlike in times past when I have rose in support of the cause in Cyprus, I am happy to say that there are some positive developments to report. On January 31, 1988, Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou of Greece and Prime Minister Turgut Ozal of Turkey held a historic meeting in Davos, Switzerland, signaling the start of a strengthening of relations between those two important United States allies. While the Cyprus issue was not addressed in a substantive way, the Davos meeting improved the atmosphere for the resolution of the Cyprus problem. Chances for peace were also advanced by the election of George Vassiliou. His eagerness to bring an end to his nation's nightmare should encourage Turkey to take the initiatives necessary to resolve this crisis.

Clearly, the presence of over 30,000 Turkish troops and thousands of Turkish settlers on Cyprus remains a roadblock to a settlement of the Cyprus dispute. Nevertheless, any settlement must include the protection of Turkish Cypriots if there is to be any hope for the resolution of the Cyprus problem.

It is for this reason that I encourage Members of this body to express their strong support for President Vassiliou's efforts to initiate a program that will culminate in the total demilitarization of the Republic of Cyprus. This program envisions Turkey withdrawing all of its occupation force and the removal of Turkish settlers now living in the occupied area.

In return, the Republic of Cyprus would take the unprecedented step of dissolving its own defense system and the Cyprus National Guard. Further, the plan would include the withdrawal of all troops provided under the 1960 Treaty of Alliance—Greek and Turkish contingents. Once the program was implemented, the only forces remaining in the Republic of Cyprus would be an international peace force under the auspices of the United Nations and a small joint Greek-Turkish Cypriot police force, also under United Nations supervision.

This demilitarization program is advantageous to all parties concerned with the Cyprus issue. First, the program would eliminate the only issue preventing the two Cypriot communities from resolving their outstanding differences. Peace on Cyprus would in turn encourage the continuation of the Davos initiative, culminating in the resumption of true peaceful relations between Greece and Turkey. Finally, the restoration of the sovereignty of Cyprus and the bringing together of Greece and Turkey will immeasurably strengthen the southeastern flank of NATO that is so critically important to our security and the security of the entire free world.

This demilitarization initiative is not a new one. United Nations General Assembly Resolutions 34/30 and 37/253, the 1979 agreement between former President Kyprianou and Mr. Denktash, and the American-British-Canadian plan of 1978 all envision the total demilitarization of the Republic of Cyprus. As defenders of freedom and the sovereignty of nations around the world, the Congress should support and encourage this program as the greatest opportunity available to restore peace to the troubled nation of Cyprus.

THE SOCIAL SECURITY RETIREMENT EARNINGS TEST: A PENALTY SENIORS SHOULD NO LONGER BEAR

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, it is time to repeal the Social Security retirement test. We have placed an unfair burden on the middle income retiree between ages 65 and 69 who is hit the hardest by the 50 percent tax on Social Security benefits when he or she earns over $8,160 per year. This reduction is especially onerous because any retiree can earn ulimited income from investments upon which no similar ceiling is placed. It is time to stop penalizing the middle-income retiree.

Today, I am introducing legislation to repeal the earnings test in its entirety.

For those aged 65 to 69, earnings of over $8,160 per year mandate reduction of Social Security retirement benefits by $1 for every $2 earned above the limit. This reduction will become $1 for every $3 earned over the limit in 1990.

In the latest year for which statistics are available, the nationwide average Social Security benefit to a retired worker was $491 per month. Accepting that this average benefit is given a middle-income retiree, and not taking into account any pension that person may receive, it is easy to see why a retiree aged 65 to 69—years in which older Americans enjoy increasing vigor—would prefer to work to maximize earnings while he or she has the energy to do so, and is still closely associated with the workplace.

Social Security Administration studies show that most retired beneficiaries continue to work in the same occupations in which they worked prior to reaching retirement age. This means that the majority of retirees who continue to work do not suddenly switch to labor at minimum wage occupations after having been in a skilled employment category. While it is true that most opt for more leisure time upon reaching retirement age, those who can, or perhaps who need to continue working part time in their former occupation at their former wage should not be encouraged by the earnings limitation to accept a lower paying job simply to remain within the income limits. The earnings limitation is a disincentive to work for those who wish to work. Discouraging productivity is not sound public policy under any circumstances.

The affluent retiree can afford to forgo benefits. The middle income retiree cannot. At a time when we are increasingly concerned with the standard of living for older Americans and the long term prospects for an aging population, it is counterproductive to penalize persons of retirement age for working. Our current system allows bank presidents or highly paid professionals to continue in remunerative occupations because they can afford to experience significant reductions in their Social Security benefits. Those who need additional earnings, be they carpenters, secretaries, or mid-level managers, face the spectre of loss of Social earnings.

Allowed to continue to work without penalty, these same people will be paying income and Social Security taxes on earnings over $8,160 per year. They will continue to contribute to their communities and to the Social Security trust fund. Immediate costs of repeal of the earnings limit to the trust fund is estimated at approximately $11 billion during the first year. This bill be in part recouped by increased payroll and income taxes, reductions on Medicare payments and SSA administrative expenses. But, there will be significant costs over and above any recoupments.

Budget considerations may make a repeal at this stage untimely; fairness and common sense, however, dictate repeal of the earnings limit as a major step toward a fundamental policy of freeing lower and middle income retirees from rules dictated by outdated demographics which encouraged the old worker to make room for the new. Today, there are approximately three workers every Social Security beneficiary. That ratio will decrease to 2 to 1 within the next 50 years. When the Social Security program was created, there were 50 workers for every beneficiary. We must face reality, and change the face of the earnings test.

My legislation is in step with demographic realities, sound public policy and a logical assessment of the pressures that will be faced by retired indivduals and those paying into the Social Security system in the future. A shrinking pre-retirement workforce and growing number of beneficiaries demands that we place the Social Security system in a posture of readiness for the future. We must not adhere to policies dictated by 1935 demographics in 1988 and beyond.

Repeal of the earnings test must come. The question is whether we will take this necessary step now, or wait until the needs of retirees and the exigencies attending Social Security finance force us to do so at a time when the costs of repeal will fall much harder on the Social Security trust fund.

NATIONAL BARRIER AWARENESS WEEK

HON. JOSEPH M. McDADE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues some very important information about National Barrier Awareness Week, which is being observed this year in the city of Scranton and throughout Lackawanna County from May 1 through May 7.

The goal of this observance is to make nondisabled persons aware of the many barriers that people with disabilities face every day of their lives. These include architectural, attitudinal, and communication barriers.

As a cosponsor of past congressional legislation declaring "National Barrier Awareness Day," I am pleased that the overwhelming success of last year's 1-day observance prompted the extension of this year's activities to an entire week.

National Barrier Awareness Week will include: Educational programs for public and private school students; encouragement of churches and synagogues to bring attention to barrier awareness; special exhibits, including a wheelchair obstacles course, displays of special equipment for the disabled, and information booths for the general public.

Mr. Speaker, the ultimate objective of barrier awareness programs throughout the country is to achieve a barrier-free environment so that the quality of life for people with disabilities will be equal to that of people without disabilities.

I commend the city of Scranton and the county of Lackawanna for their efforts in promoting this important observance, and urge my colleagues to support National Barrier Awareness Week in their communities.

RECOGNITION OF THE CALIFORNIA SMALL BUSINESS OF THE YEAR

HON. RICHARD H. LEHMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize the vision, commitment and achievement of two very special and dedicated business people. From what started in 1979 as a great idea, with little more than ambition, enthusiasm and knowledge of home health care, Kathy Jensen and Angela Franklin have transformed their idea of affordable, reliable home nursing care into a business so dynamic that it has recently been named California's Outstanding Small Business of the Year for 1988.

Nearly 10 years ago a social worker and a nurse quit their jobs managing a home health care service to strike out on their own. While times were hard at first, relying heavily on convalescent homes seeking relief staff, they have been able to turn their business into an important part of the communities in which they are located. Professional Reliable Nursing Service now employs over 650 full- and part-time people year round who provide home nursing care in five counties; three of which, Calaveras, San Joaquin, and Tuolumne, are in the 18th Congressional District of California.

In addition to providing a much needed basic service the agency has been a leader in pioneering new ideas and approaches to home nursing care. PRN was the first agency in California to provide in-home care to respirator dependent patients who otherwise would have remained in an acute care hospital indefinitely. This effort led directly to a change in the state's medical regulations regarding Medi-Cal benefits for these patients.

PRN also broke new ground with the development of the congregate residential living arrangement for three people who had been hospitalized, but had no home to return to. This agreement with the State allowed PRN to pool the resources of the individuals to meet the rent and utility requirements and contract with the State to provide in-home health care. This arrangement still endures today, several years later.

Patient/clients can also benefit from far more than the expert nursing care provided by PRN. Live-in helpers, housekeeping and handyman services are among the innovative services that have helped to distinguish this home nursing agency from traditional home care firms.

In today's corporate America, where importance is measured in number of overseas offices and percentage of market share, it is important to remember the role that small businesses play in the American economy. Small business employs nearly 50 percent of the work force and contributes up to 40 percent of the national output. In short, the small business concept embodies the ideals that made the American Dream a reality; for Kathy Jensen and Angela Franklin, Professional Reliable Nursing Service's selection as the California Small Business of the Year certainly marks a milestone in their American Dream.

I believe that Kathy and Angela have earned this honor through hard work and dedication. I congratulate them on their fruitful efforts and encourage them to continue to be a model and testament for other small businesses striving for success.

ANN E. CASEY FOUNDATION SALUTED

HON. HAL DAUB

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I want to take a moment to recognize the Ann E. Casey Foundation, which assists cities and States to promote positive changes in child welfare programs and reform of the juvenile justice system.

The founder of UPS, Mr. Jim Casey, named the foundation in honor of his mother, Ann E. Casey. His support of the foundation has helped children in all kinds of situations, and contributions to aid children like the work of this foundation deserve our heartiest thanks and support.

Children face a myriad of problems, and the Federal Government should take note of these programs in order to learn what programs work well for troubled children.

My home State of Nebraska is a finalist for the State grant program, and I want to extend my heartiest congratulations to them for their efforts.

Again, I want to remember Mr. Casey for all his efforts and I urge my colleagues to take note of this extraordinary foundation.

RECOGNIZING TUFTONIA'S DAY, APRIL 19, 1988

HON. PETER A. DeFAZIO

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join and recognize the thousands of my fellow Tufts University alumni throughout the world who today turn their thoughts to alma mater as they celebrate the fourth annual "Tuftonia's Day."

Tuftonia's Day is a university holiday of reminiscence and revelry observed every year on April 19. It is a special day on which the more than 60,000 alumni of this great international institution, located in Medford, MA, celebrate and remember Tufts. It is an occasion each year for Tuftonian's to come together, actually and spiritually, to toast their university.

Tufts University was founded in 1852 and currently enrolls approximately 7,200 students from 48 States and 75 foreign countries. The main campus in Medford, MA, houses the College of Liberal Arts, the College of Engineering, Jackson College, the Boston School of Occupational Therapy, the College of Special Studies, the School of Nutrition and the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy. The Boston Campus contains the Schools of Medicine and Dentistry, while the School of Veterinary Medicine, the only one in New England, is located in Grafton, MA.

Tuftonia's Day derives its name from the title of the venerable Tufts football fight song written by E.W. Hayes, class of 1916. Official proclamations recognizing Tuftonia's Day have been issued by the Governor of Massachusetts and the mayors of Boston, Medford, and Sommerville, MA.

The holiday is celebrated in diverse and creative ways. In addition to a formal ceremony on campus, there are local and international observances ranging from small gatherings in restaurants to champagne receptions in museums, art galleries and private homes; from a group trolley ride to a ride on a jumbo elephant in India. This Friday, in New York's Times Square, the famed electronic billboard will flash belated Tuftonia's Day greetings at periodic intervals throughout the day.

Tufts alumni from Hartford to Hong Kong and from San Diego are coming together today to think Tufts, thank Tufts, and toast Tufts. I take this opportunity to recognize Tuftonia's Day and join my fellow alumni in saluting the rich history, great accomplishments and continuing excellence of Tufts University. To Tufts students, faculty, administration, and alumni, happy Tuftonia's Day.

LT. THOMAS EDWARD DOYLE

HON. WALLY HERGER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, recently, a constituent of mine, 1st Lt. Thomas Edward Doyle, died following the crash of his F-16 jet fighter in Forst, West Germany. According to eyewitnesses, Lieutenant Doyle remained in his plane as it went down in an effort to direct it away from the center of the town and toward a remote area on the outskirts of the town, saving an untold number of citizens as a result.

Lieutenant Doyle had distinguished himself as a young man of remarkable talent and good will in his community, and was a source of great pride to his family and friends. As a teenager, he was active in his church, the Civil Air Patrol, and a number of other local organizations. In the eighth grade he set his sights on an Air Force career, and pursued a rigorous academic course of study at Las Plumas High School, focusing on math and science. Appointed to the Air Force Academy, he attended pilot training at Sheppard Air Force Base in Wichita, TX, where he received the Academic Excellence Award for maintaining a 98.6-percent grade average. At the age of 24, he was already a licensed glider pilot, a licensed fixed wing pilot, and a certified flight instructor. His future was as bright as anyone his age could possibly have hoped for.

This nation is fortunate to be served by young men and women of Lieutenant Doyle's caliber, and while this is certainly a time of great sorrow for all who knew him, we can all draw strength from Lieutenant Doyle's memory and remember him for his courage and determination to succeed. It is my hope that his actions will be recognized by the Air Force, and that he will be appropriately honored. His outstanding accomplishments and his unwavering commitment to his family, community, and country provides an example for us all.

TRIBUTE TO VISTA VOLUNTEERS

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a community service organization working actively in my district as well as nationally. On Tuesday, April 26, 1988, Volunteers In Service to America, VISTA, will hold a VISTA volunteer recognition event at the Lenox Hill Neighborhood Association honoring the VISTA volunteers serving in the New York metropolitan area. At the Lenox Hill Neighborhood Association, as well as the other VISTA projects in New York City, VISTA staffers provide the community with a variety of programs and social services.

Recently, VISTA has opened an Open Congregation Resource Center/International Center for the Disabled on East 24th Street. Its mission is to help congregations in the metropolitan area become more aware of and responsive to the needs of the disabled. In other parts of New York, and the country, VISTA runs many other programs that include drug abuse counseling, family planning, job training, and literacy tutoring.

All the VISTA interns are private citizens who volunteer to help the Nation's poverty problem. They live and work full time in the low-income communities they serve, thus adding a full-time presence and personal involvement to VISTA's battle against poverty.

I ask all of my colleagues to join with me in paying recognition to this fine organization for all of its many community services.

CONGRATULATIONS TO MAJ. GEN. PETER T. KEMPF

HON. JAMES H. BILBRAY

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the Member's attention the recent announcement by President Reagan to promote Maj. Gen. Peter T. Kempf to lieutenant general and select him to command the 12th Air Force and U.S. Southern Command Air Forces at Bergstrom Air Force Base in Texas.

General Kempf has been commander of the U.S. Air Force Tactical Fighter Weapons Center at Nellis Air Force Base in southern Nevada since September 1985.

Born in Elizabeth, NJ, he graduated from Whittier Union High School and attended Whittier College in California for 2 years before entering the Air Force as an aviation cadet.

Earning his commission in 1958, General Kempf continued his education by completing a bachelor of arts degree in geography from the University of Nebraska in 1965, and graduated from the Armed Forces Staff College in 1971. He completed the National War College curriculum in 1976.

His 31-year Air Force career has included four overseas tours of duty: two in Japan and two in Southeast Asia. He is a command pilot and navigator, with more than 6,000 flying hours.

During his service in the Air Force, General Kempf assignments have led him to command the 58th Tactical Training Wing at Luke AFB, AZ; the 4th Tactical Fighter Wing at Seymour-Johnson AFB, NC; the 388th Tactical Fighter Wing at Hill AFB, VT; and the 833d Air Division at Holloman AFB, NM, prior to assuming command at Nellis.

He also has served as a military assistant in the office of the Secretary and Deputy Secretary of Defense in our Nation's Capital.

Mr. Speaker, those of us from southern Nevada would like to thank General Kempf for his service at Nellis and wish him the very best in his new assignment.

SMALL BUSINESS RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1988

HON. CHARLES HATCHER

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. HATCHER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the Small Business Rural Economic Development Act of 1988. This bill would amend the existing Small Business Administration [SBA] 504 loan program. The present 504 program is a successful public/private partnership that has helped promote expansion and job creation in America, and I believe this legislation will help improve and expand this economic development tool throughout our rural areas.

The SBA 503/504 lending program provides for long-term, fixed asset financing to small and medium size businesses. Since its inception, the program has issued more than $800 million in debentures, which in turn has leveraged in excess of $1 billion in private capital to create over 100,000 jobs nationwide. The default rate for the program is less than 3 percent.

The Small Business Subcommittee on Energy and Agriculture, which I chair, held a hearing on October 22, 1987, in order to discuss means in which to aid the economic woes of rural America. Throughout this hearing, a common thread in all the testimony was the need of startup capital in our rural areas. This bill would make the SBA 504 lending program more accessible to rural America.

I am hopeful that my colleagues, seeing the need for economic development in our rural areas, will support this bill.

KILDEE HONORS EARL L. HENRY

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in honoring a retiring labor leader from my hometown of Flint, MI. Earl L. Henry is retiring from the General Motors Truck and Bus Plant after 35 years of distinguished service to the hardworking members of UAW Local 598. The membership of UAW Local 598 is honoring Earl Henry by bestowing upon him the Walter P. Reuther Distinguished Service Award on April 24, 1988. It is an award he richly deserves.

Earl L. Henry has truly been a dedicated union activist working diligently for the rank and file he has represented in a number of key positions within the union. Earl has served as president of Local 598 for 3 years, vice president of Local 598 for 3 years, chairman of the shop committee for 4 years, shop committee representative for 7 years, district committee representative for 5 years, and he has served on local union standing committees for several years. Earl has also served as a delegate to the Community Action Program Council and has been chairman of subcouncils 4 and 7A.

Earl L. Henry has also been a dedicated community volunteer, bringing the same commitment to a number of worthy community organizations. He has served as president of the Rankin Park Committee, president of the Ainsworth Elementary Saturday Basketball League, on the Rankin School Boy Scout Committee, president of the Ainsworth High School Cross County Boosters, as a volunteer for the Genesee County Food Bank, on the Michigan Sesquicentennial Committee, on the Carman Ainsworth Community Action Committee, and as a member of the area 13 Michigan Special Olympics Advisory Board.

Earl is also an active member of the Democratic Party as a precinct delegate, a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and as an advisor to the Labor Museum of Greater Flint.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a great honor and pleasure for me to recognize Earl L. Henry for his tireless efforts on behalf of the labor movement as well as his commitment to his community. Although Earl is retiring after many years of hard work, I have a distinct notion that he will continue to involve himself and leave his mark on the many good causes which make Flint such a great place to live and raise families. Earl has served as an inspiration within organized labor in our community for more than 30 years. His dedication to the labor movement and spirit of solidarity has been a personal inspiration to me during those many times I have sought his counsel. I know the entire U.S. House of Representatives joins me in wishing him continued success in his retirement.

NATIONAL LITERACY DAY 1988

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce today, for the third year in a row, a resolution to designate July 2, 1988 as National Literacy Day. I hope to continue calling attention to the large numbers of Americans that cannot function in our society because they are illiterate.

Mr. Speaker, studies indicate that 27 million Americans cannot read a newspaper, cannot fill out a job application, cannot maintain a checkbook or understand the warning label on a bottle of medicine. In short, our Nation has 27 million people that form a class of functional illiterates that are uneducated, untrainable, and economically dependent. And these numbers are growing every year. The Department of Education estimates that, every year, 2.3 million more illiterates, including high school dropouts, unlettered pass-along graduates and immigrants, are added to our society.

We are paying a high price in our Nation for this unfortunate deficiency. As chairman of the House Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer Protection, and Competitiveness, I am concerned that our Nation's competitiveness is being eroded by the presence in the workplace of millions of Americans who are functionally or technologically illiterate. There is a direct correlation between the number of illiterate adults unable to perform at the standard necessary for available employment and the money that is allocated to child welfare costs and unemployment compensation.

Social and economic discrimination problems are propounded because illiteracy is highest among blacks and Hispanics. The high percentage of illiterate juveniles in criminal court indicate that illiteracy fosters crime. Of concern to our Nation's strength is the fact that illiteracy directly impacts our military capability. Millions of dollars of damage is still done to expensive equipment because many men and women in the service are unable to read and comprehend even the simplified manuals.

The total costs related to our Nation's literacy are estimated to exceed $225 billion annually. Chronic unemployment is a further problem that illiterate individuals in our Nation need to deal with. Up to 75 percent of the unemployed lack the basic skills to get a job or be trained for a job.

Disturbingly, Federal funding for literacy programs has not been sufficient to address a problem reaching mass proportions. Federal, State, municipal, and private literacy programs have only been able to reach 5 percent of the total illiterate population. The annual amount of money spent by our Federal Government for this problem amounts to $17 per person for a total of $352 million. The Department of Education estimates that only 2 million people are reached annually by these programs.

The total cost of illiteracy to our Nation cannot be measured accurately. However, our Nation is paying dearly in lost productivity and human misery. We hear of sad stories of people suffering tragedies because they could not read: the industrial worker killed because he could not read a warning sign; the mother who gave her sick child pink detergent instead of stomach medicine because she could not decipher medicine labels; the mother who thought she was signing a routine field trip permission slip for her daughter only to discover that she had relegated her daughter to a home for the retarded.

It is for these reasons that we call attention to the problem of illiteracy in our Nation by designating July 2, 1988 as National Literacy Day.

I urge the support of my colleagues in this worthwhile effort.

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER WEEK

HON. DOUGLAS APPLEGATE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite my colleagues to join me in National Volunteer Week and honor the dedicated volunteers of the Jefferson County Retired Senior Volunteer Program in Steubenville, OH. It is with their continued support that the program continues to serve the community in such a needed capacity.

Since 1973, when the Jefferson County RSVP received their first ACTION grant, the program has become a vital and viable part of the community. The volunteers, all over 60 years of age and retired, serve in area hospitals, nursing homes, nutrition sites, senior centers, mental health and mental retardation centers, governmental units and many other nonprofit agencies such as Red Cross and the Salvation Army. Over 80 nonprofit, governmental and proprietory health care facilities in Jefferson County are served by RSVP volunteers.

With over 600 volunteers, the program contributed 68,643.5 hours of service last year. In dollars, $229,955.73 of services was generated from an ACTION grant in the amount of $32,200. This represents $7 worth of services for every Federal dollar received.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and pleasure that I honor these committee volunteers during National Volunteer Week. The dedication these people show in helping to better their community is what National Volunteer Week is all about and why we honor the people who daily volunteer their services.

TRIBUTE TO CHARLIE HARVILLE

HON. HOWARD COBLE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, on April 27, 1988, a television legend in my district will celebrate 50 years in broadcasting. I want to congratulate Mr. Charlie Harville for reaching this historic milestone. Charlie is the executive sports director emeritus of WFMY-TV in Greensboro, NC. During his half century of outstanding community service, Charlie Harville has become known and loved by everyone in North Carolina.

Charlie, a native of High Point, received his broadcasting start at a local radio station in his hometown. After serving his country in the Air Force, Charlie resumed his radio career. After stops in Martinsville, VA, Goldsboro, NC, and LaSalle, IL, Charlie moved to Greensboro, NC, to enter the exciting new world of television. Charlie and television grew up together in North Carolina. He was sports director of WFMY-TV from 1949 to 1963. He moved back to his hometown of High Point to be sports director of WGHP-TV from 1963 to 1977. In 1977, Charlie returned to WFMY-TV to become sports director again until his retirement from full-time duties in 1986. Since that time, he has worked for the station on a part-time basis.

Charlie has been much more than a sports reporter. He has been a supporter and active participant in numerous civic and community events. Charlie has worked for many charitable causes during his illustrious career. He was a founding father and the first president of the North Carolina Association of Sports Broadcasters. He did not limit his sights to just the world of television. He is the author of a respected book on the sports history of our State. Charlie is equally well known for his support of amateur athletics.

Ask anyone in North Carolina about Charlie Harville and they will tell you two things—he was the best at his job and they considered him a friend. For 50 years, via radio and television, the people of North Carolina and beyond considered Charlie Harville to be a friend who kept them informed on the world of sports. Charlie was there with a smiling face and cheerful voice to report who won and who lost. For 50 years, we have been the real winners because it was Charlie Harville who kept us informed about our favorite teams and players.

We miss seeing Charlie on TV every night, but we are grateful for his many years of outstanding sports reporting. We hope he has many years of healthy, happy, and fulfilling retirement. But as long as there is a game or race nearby, we know Charlie Harville will be there. It has been our pleasure to know that for the past 50 years, Charlie Harville was there. Charlie's signature closing was: "And that's the best in sports today." For 50 years he has proven that Charlie Harville was and is the best in sports today. Congratulations, Charlie.

INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO EXTEND TITLES V AND VI OF THE LIBRARY SERVICES AND CONSTRUCTION ACT

HON. PAT WILLIAMS

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, today I am joined by a bipartisan group of my colleagues in introducing legislation to extend the authorization of titles V and VI of the Library Services and Construction Act through fiscal year 1989.

Title V of the Library Services and Construction Act authorizes discretionary grants for the acquisition of foreign language materials directly to state and local public libraries.

Title VI of the Library Services and Construction Act authorizes discretionary grants for library literacy programs.

A one year extension of these programs will bring titles V and VI in line with the reauthorization cycle of the remaining titles of the Library Services and Construction Act.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.

NATIONAL BARRIER AWARENESS DAY

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, my fellow colleagues, I want to take this opportunity to tell you about a very special event taking place in Larkspur, Marin County on Saturday May 7 in observance of National Barrier Awareness Day. On this day the disabled and nondisabled of my district will come together to share information and experiences in a uniquely informative setting.

At this gathering the disabled members of the community will be educating the nondisabled members about the social, cultural, physical and architectural barriers that exist between these two groups by means of exhibits, entertainment and joint participation in games. At the end of the day, all will have a better understanding of each other's concerns and, hopefully, will have succeeded in breaking down a barrier or two. Certainly, the participants will be the richer for having made the attempt.

Saturday May 7, 1988 is National Barrier Awareness Day—a day of sharing between the disabled and the nondisabled members of all our communities. I hope you will join me in commending the citizens of Marin County for their hard work and care in making their observance of National Barrier Awareness Day a meaningful one. We can all benefit by pausing to focus on the social, cultural, physical, and architectual barriers which exists for the disabled and by participating in the process of breaking down these barriers.

WAR POWERS AND THE PERSIAN GULF

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 19, 1988

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, April 18 was a dramatic day in the Persian Gulf, with United States forces responding to numerous attacks by Iranian naval forces. The U.S. actions continue to be taken in self-defense while in the course of securing the freedom of navigation in the gulf. Furthermore, the United States response to Iranian military actions are consistently been measured and proportionate.

The U.S. actions are justified under international law. They are also consistent with U.S. law, since—as the President has repeatedly indicated—they are undertaken under his authority as Commander-in-Chief. While there are undeniably hostilities occurring in the region, this does not mean that the War Powers Resolution should be applied.

The War Powers Resolution primarily attempts to address situations in which U.S. forces are placed into "hostilities or situations in which imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated by the circumstances." But under the Constitution, the President has the right to order military operations to protect U.S. interests in the absence of a situation that requires a declaration of war by Congress.

The situation in the Persian Gulf, while threatening, does not require congressional action at this time. While there have been "hostilities" in the commonsense meaning of the term, U.S. forces have at all times undertaken only limited defensive and retaliatory actions in support of the internationally recognized right of freedom of navigation in the gulf.

It is reassuring to see that the congressional reaction to the recent U.S. military actions in the gulf has been overwhelming positive. Few calls have been heard as yet for invocation of the War Powers Resolution. The administration is to be praised, not only for its steadfast policy in the gulf, but for the timely and full consultations with congressional leaders on planned military activities in response to the latest examples of Iranian aggression.

The Constitution is working fine with respect to the situation in the gulf. The President is carefully conducting his responsibilities as Commander-in-Chief, and Congress is receiving the information it needs to discharge its legislative functions. This state of affairs is infinitely preferable to dispute over the War Powers Resolution. Such disagreement would only create division at home, communicate a signal of uncertainty abroad, and lower the morale of U.S. forces in the gulf.

Mr. Speaker, like many members, I initially had doubts about the wisdom of protecting the reflagged Kuwaiti tankers in the Persian Gulf. I have been considerably reassured by the cautious approach of the administration in pursuing this operation in support of maritime freedom, and by the success of the administration's policy in uniting our friends and allies abroad in support of gulf security. It must continue to be recognized, however, that the situation in the gulf will remain volatile for the foreseeable future.

I commend to my colleagues an editorial which appeared in the Wall Street Journal on April 19 with respect to the War Powers Resolution and the situation in the Persian Gulf:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Apr. 19, 1988]

THE UNMENTIONED ACT

President Reagan Sunday night again ordered military action in the Persian Gulf without invoking the War Powers Resolution. The congressional leaders he briefed before the attack made hardly a murmur. Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, much to his credit, said yesterday he supported the President's decision.

It is to his credit because fellow congressional Democrats had attempted to make a major issue of Mr. Reagan's noncompliance when the U.S. Navy first engaged the Iranians last October. Indeed, a group of 110 congresspersons went to court asking that judges force the President to obey the resolution, an effort that obviously hasn't made much of an impression on the President.

To be sure, there were hints yesterday that the war powers fight had not been forgotten. Also at the Sunday briefing was House Majority Leader Thomas Foley and he later took some pains to point out that the Monday morning raid on two Iranian sea platforms was a "single action, to be a response and a deterrent to further action."

In other words, it was designed to deter hostilities, rather than engage in them. This sounded like a subtle explanation of why Congressman Foley had not made an issue of the President's failure to invoke the resolution. It also could be read as a tacit admission that the provisions of the resolution, even if they were constitutional, are not practical.

A President bound by the resolution could not act with the decisiveness that Mr. Reagan demonstrated Sunday night. Indecisiveness in a Commander in Chief with responsibilities for troops in a war zone is an open invitation for would-be aggressors to try their luck. Mr. Reagan's strike at Iranian platforms last October in retaliation for an Iranian missile attack on a U.S.-flagged Kuwaiti tanker cooled Iran's ardor for sea action for some months and it only has been recently that the ayatollah has decided to have another go.

The War Powers Resolution of 1973 implied a superior congressional wisdom, something that was not especially evident when that body overwhelmingly supported President Johnson's deployments in Vietnam with the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution. It says that the President must report to Congress within 48 hours after U.S. forces are deployed in hostilities or situations where "imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated by the circumstances." If Congress does not authorize the deployment within 90 days, they must be withdrawn.

For one thing, this amounts to a congressional veto, which the Supreme Court says is unconstitutional. More to the point, it limits the necessary and constitutional powers of the Commander in Chief to deploy troops to protect vital U.S. interests.

Let's assume that the President had invoked the resolution last October, as so many congresspersons were demanding, and Congress had failed to act—a plausible supposition given the makeup of this Congress. The world's most powerful navy then would have been required by provisions of the resolution to sail out of the gulf, leaving a vital oil lifeline for Europe and Japan unprotected from the depredations of a minor tyrant, the Ayatollah Khomeini.

The absense of U.S. leadership would have made even more timid the NATO allies who later joined the U.S. in policing the gulf and would have raised questions about U.S. fitness to lead the alliance. Finally, with carte blanche to prey on shipping, the madman of Qum could have set the gulf ablaze, making the intervention of other gulf nations and a spreading of the Iran-Iraq war a possibility.

The U.S. Navy proved Monday morning that it is fully capable of dealing with the ayatollah. It razed the Sirri and Sasson platforms in the southern gulf, knocking out the command and control radar facilities of the Iranian military that come to bear on the Hormuz Strait choke point. It also sank a patrol boat and damaged two Iranian frigates. This was in punishment for the Iranian mine attack last week on the U.S.S. Roberts.

The American Navy was built for the purpose of carrying out those unpleasant tasks that become necessary to preserve some sort of order for the peaceful nations of the world. It was not built, as some congressmen seem to believe, merely for the purpose of providing jobs in shipyards. The Navy is commanded by the President, who is elected by all the American people and responsible to them. Other than a tortured sermon by Jesse Jackson in New York on behalf of his foreign policy of nothingness, we haven't heard many complaints about events of Monday Morning. That absence says a lot.
